in Wartime*

BRYANT COLLEGE
PROVIDENCE RHODE ISLAND

Bryant College cordially invites prospective students and their parents to visit the College, to see the nine College buildings and discuss with the Deans or Administrative Officers the selection of the course best suited to the individual aims and ambitions of the student. The College offices are open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.—Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Education in Wartime

Unprecedented Opportunities

A high percent of the young men and women who graduate from high schools each year go on to colleges of higher education. Some of them go to colleges of liberal arts, but more and more of them every year are entering colleges of higher education for business. This is because today Business and Government offer the greatest opportunities and the highest salaries of any field to which young men and women can turn.

In this year of our national emergency, education for Business is of even greater importance than ever. Today it is not what you want to do, but what you CAN do that counts. The demand for young men and women who CAN do the important work of Accountants, Secretaries, Auditors, Cost Accountants, Tax Accountants, Statisticians, Office Managers, Office Machine Operators and other office assistants is without precedent in the history of our nation.

Competition Will Be Keen

Because of the acute shortage of these office assistants in Government and War Industry, some young men and women are finding employment even though they lack sound education for the work. But after the war, they will find it extremely difficult, even impossible, to HOLD these positions. When the war is over, competition for positions will be keen. When Government and Business return to normalcy, employers will be more exacting in their demands and will pay for thoroughly qualified assistants only. There is no doubt about this. Everyone who has lived through three wars—as Bryant College has since its inception in 1863—knows this to be an inevitable result. Even now, before normalcy has returned, how often do you hear a businessman say of one of his present employes: "She's terrible. Has only a smattering of knowledge about secretarial work—but what can I do? There is such a shortage of really qualified secretaries just now that I had to take what I could get. But when this war is over—I'll get a secretary who has had a thorough education for the job".

And how often do you hear discouraged college graduates bemoan the fact that they cannot get a position because there is no SPECIFIC work for which they have been educated. Even after four years at an academic college, they have had to seek specialized education for BUSINESS before they could find a position.

The Future—
Not Today

So it is that more and more high school graduates are turning to business, and shrewdly qualifying for TOP positions by sound, thorough, practical education.

"What I want to be five years from now, not just what I can be today" is the thought in the minds of today's high school graduates.

Bryant College in September, 1942, will begin its eightieth year!

80 Years
of Success

For seventy-nine years it has gone steadily on its way, not just a business school, but a state-chartered, degree-granting COLLEGE of higher education for business. The United States Department of Education recognizes it as a professional school of higher education. Twice before in its seventy-nine years it has met the abnormal conditions of a country at war and all through those times has steadily maintained its high standards as a college with a purpose. Once again it meets a national emergency by offering the same sound regular courses and special War Emergency Courses which educate young men and women for responsible positions behind the men behind the guns, positions as important, as necessary and as patriotic as the shouldering of a gun.

Wartime is bringing many changes in education.

A Degree In Two Years

While some colleges throughout the country now begin to "telescope" their courses, the length of the degree courses at Bryant College remains the same. Why? Because ALREADY Bryant courses are intensive. By having college years of forty-eight weeks each—and with short and few vacations—instead of the usual thirty-four week college year with long and frequent vacations, Bryant College gives the same number of credit hours in two years that most academic colleges have given in four years.

A Saving of Time and Money

The advantage to the student in these two-year degree courses was recognized by Bryant College when, in 1916, it was state authorized to grant degrees. To be able to secure a degree in two years means a saving of not only two years' tuition, but also two years of valuable time. The academic college student who enters upon his course at the same time that a Bryant student does, will still be in college with two more years before securing his degree, while the Bryant student will have graduated. The Bryant graduate thereby will have had a two-year start in business and will be ready for advancement when the academic college student is just ready to start.

Bryant Pioneered

So, in the present war emergency, Bryant College continues the concentrated courses it has been offering for TWENTY-FIVE YEARS and which many of the liberal arts colleges are now starting to offer.

Information

This year, Bryant College will inaugurate another time-saving innovation—a special early entrance date, June 1, in addition to the regular entrance date for the Fall term. Heretofore, students have entered the Day Division only twice a year: at the beginning of the Fall term in September, or at the beginning of the mid-year term in February. In this War Emergency year, many high school graduates feel the wisdom of preparing for business immediately, without the interruption of the summer months, and they may now enter the one-year War Emergency course in Business Administration; the 24-week Finishing Stenographic Course for graduates of commercial high schools; and the 24-week Stenographic Course for college and university graduates on June 1. Students entering in June, will then be able to continue their education through the Fall and Winter and be three months ahead in their course.

Entrance may be made also in ALL regular and War Emergency courses in September or February.

Complete information about the regular courses, and four Special War Emergency courses which are offered for the duration of the war and as long afterward as they are needed, is contained in the Bryant College catalog. A free copy of this catalog, and other literature of the College, will be sent to you, without obligation of any kind, if you will fill out and mail the enclosed postage pre-paid card.
