Gary Frechette '54 sent an e-mail to the alumni relations office when he wanted to catch up with his Bryant roommate (who also happened to be his oldest daughter's godfather). After some research, alumni relations was able to bring Gary together with Duane Lighthall '55 for a long-overdue reunion. Alumni relations has hundreds of stories like Gary and Duane's.

Reuniting alumni is just one of the many services the Office of alumni relations can perform for you. We keep you updated through our various alumni relations activities. Some of the more popular activities include the following:

Judy employs her management and people skills to reengage alumni through class steering committees and regional gatherings. "I've always enjoyed meeting and working with all types of people," said Judy. "The relationships I've built with Bryant's alumni have greatly impacted my life."

Donna Harris has served four presidents in her 23 years at Bryant, initially working for a few years in the 1970s before returning in 1988 to join the alumni relations staff. "I have been so fortunate to have provided outreach and information to the regional alumni network (RAN) volunteers. Currently, Vicki helps support RAN events, and can often be seen volunteering at community service functions alongside the alumni. "What I most enjoy about my job is that there is always something different to do or learn," she said. "I feel very lucky to be working with such a great bunch of people on such a beautiful campus."

Many of you also remember Marcia Beaulieu, and although she is no longer working in alumni relations...
We keep you updated through the Alumni Bulletin and e-mails about upcoming events. If you’re in the area and want to take a tour of the campus or you have a Bryant story you want to tell, contact the alumni relations office. Here is a snapshot of your team!

Robin Torbron Warde is the director of alumni relations, having served as the interim director for a year and a half. She began at Bryant in 2001 as the director of development for institutional programs. A 23-year veteran of higher education, Robin has worked with alumni at Columbia, Brown, and Wheaton.

“I have had the remarkable opportunity to meet and work with many very special alumni since coming to Bryant,” she said. “I can’t think of a more fulfilling role than ensuring that the University continues to provide value to our graduates by enriching and expanding alumni networks and services.”

Judy Mastronardi Dumas has been in alumni relations for nine years helping alumni reconnect to each other and to Bryant and developing various programs of interest to alumni. “I love to create programs and events and see them come to life,” she said.

Donna also interacts with the alumni daily. “I’ve developed many friendships with Loyal Guard alumni and those alumni and students involved in the Student Alumni Association,” she continued. As advisor to Bryant’s Student Alumni Association (SAA), Donna received the “Most Outstanding Advisor Award,” given to one adviser each year at the Association of Student Advancement Programs’ national conference.

Eileen Deary ’79 is the newest member of the team, having arrived just over a year ago. Eileen is the voice on the phone when you call (401) 232-6040 and the friendly e-mail correspondent at alumni@bryant.edu. She’s also the expert behind Bryant’s online community. “One of the most rewarding parts of this job is reconnecting alumni who had previously lost touch with one another,” she said.

Vicki Paquin arrived at Bryant 15 years ago and joined the alumni relations staff shortly after to help with general office support and

Marcia Beaulieu, and although she is no longer working in alumni relations, she isn’t far away. As a matter of fact, she provided us with the story of Frechette and Lighthall. She works for Dean Jack Triffis in the College of Business and always welcomes visits from alumni. “I met so many great people in my 12½ years in alumni relations,” she said. “My heart will always be with alumni.”

Bryant’s alumni relations office wouldn’t be complete without student support. Two alumni relations interns, Wilberte Paul ’07 and Amr Zawawi ’07, are helping to plan events, organize mailings, and create new models to measure alumni satisfaction with services. Both students spend one semester as a work-study student, and a second semester in a credit-bearing internship.

You can find your alumni relations team members in the Unistructure, sharing office space and staffing with the university advancement team. Give anyone on the team a call if you plan to visit campus so that special arrangements can be made for tours, meetings with faculty, or other special requests.
Fellow alumni:

As I finish my second two-year term as president of the Bryant University National Alumni Council (NAC) and Alumni Association, I want to let you know how I view the state of our alumni association and some thoughts on the future, especially the need for a new Alumni Center on campus.

The Goals of the NAC

The overarching goal of the National Alumni Council is to forge lifelong partnerships between the University and its graduates by providing opportunities for professional and personal fellowship among alumni. Our efforts are supported by a great alumni relations staff, as well as by many alumni volunteers serving on class steering committees and regional networks throughout the world. We must encourage a sense of school pride and help our alums understand how they can further enhance the prestige of Bryant University and the educational experience for future generations. (As the years pass, Bryant’s continued pursuit of academic excellence positively impacts how our undergraduate and graduate degrees are perceived in the global marketplace – making them more and more valuable.)

NAC Achievements

While there is always more we can do to help each other and Bryant, we have recently achieved the following:

- Revitalized the regional alumni networks across the country and the globe by expanding regional community service events and other networking activities and opportunities.
- Added and expanded affinity networks that bring alumni together with similar professional, athletic, and lifestyle interests for personal and career enhancement.
- Coordinated our efforts with the Athletic Department to ensure alumni-athletes stay connected to Bryant.
- Improved communication effectiveness through e-mail and enhanced Bryant’s online community through My Page, photo gallery, class pages, class notes and other features.
- Broadened alumni involvement with students through activities such as Festival of Lights, as well as alumni presence at Student Affairs recognition events such as the International and Multicultural Student Awards night and the Student Senate Reunion.
- Collaborated closely with the members of the Student Alumni Association on events and activities that benefit both organizations and their constituencies.
- Offered services that benefit our alums such as access to the International Trade Data Network (ITDN) and the use of Bryant’s superb library.
- Held our first-ever Alumni Leadership Retreat to chart the future course of the Bryant University Alumni Association.
The Future

I have been privileged and honored to serve as president of the Bryant University NAC and Alumni Association. As I step aside in April 2007 to make way for the new president, Ray Grigilevich, there is one final priority I want to encourage you to become involved in. Anyone who has set foot in the nineteenth century Mowry Alumni House knows it is inadequate for our current needs as well our future growth. The time is right for Bryant University to construct an Alumni Center that reflects the important role alumni play within the Bryant community. Our involvement in this community does not end after passing through the Archway at Commencement.

A multipurpose Alumni Center on Bryant’s campus would be used by alumni for various large and small reunions, meetings, events, and other gatherings, as well as provide office and conference space for the alumni relations and university advancement teams at Bryant. I firmly believe having an Alumni Center on campus would be a major breakthrough for Bryant and all alums. When alumni come back to campus they are amazed by the many achievements of faculty and students. The University currently has other building projects and initiatives in the planning stage. A final “brick and mortar” piece on the horizon must be to build an Alumni Center for us.

This important project requires the cooperation of the Board of Trustees and the President’s Office, and it is vital we encourage them to begin to integrate a new Alumni Center into the overall campus plan and incorporate it into the University’s strategic goals and long-range plans. It should be part of Bryant’s next capital campaign. When it happens, each of us will have the opportunity to contribute to make it a reality.

As I look forward to new opportunities to serve Bryant University, I want to express my heartfelt thanks to my fellow members of the National Alumni Council, the hundreds of alums involved with our regional networks, the students of the Student Alumni Association, and the superb alumni relations staff — especially Robin Warde, Judy Mastronardi Dumas, Donna Harris, Vicki Paquin, and Eileen Deary ’79. Each of them has worked incredibly hard to accomplish so much. I also want to thank Tom Taylor ’63, ’98H, chairman of the Board of Trustees, Jack Callahan ’56, ’05H, past chairman of the Board of Trustees, other members of the Board of Trustees and, of course, Ron and Kati Machley, for their tremendous support of our Alumni Association and our many alumni initiatives.

It has been my pleasure to serve you as your president. Best of success to the new officers of the National Alumni Council and Alumni Association: Ray Grigilevich ’92, ’00 MBA (president), Shannon Dunnigan ’93, ’97 MBA (1st vice-president), and Jim Magee ’88 (2nd vice-president).

Stay in touch. See you around the campus.

Sincerely,

Buzz Waltman ’76
Alumna Profile: Carolyn MaHarry ’84

"There’s only one way to sum up the career I’ve dedicated myself to — dynamic,” said Carolyn (Ulrich) MaHarry. “For more than 20 years, I’ve been involved in a business that has never been static. Each day brings new challenges and opportunities.”

MaHarry is senior vice president and managing director of Brand Logic in Santa Monica, California, a company that helps Fortune 500 corporations manage their brand through research, strategy, and design solutions in print and interactive media.

“I love working with corporations to solve knotty communications or design challenges with unique solutions,” she said.

MaHarry credits Bryant — and her BSBA degree in marketing — for giving her a firm foundation on which to build her successful career.

“Bryant has a community that nurtures and supports the highest academic standard while at the same time making it a place to easily get involved in the community,” said MaHarry. “Whether you got involved in cocurricular activities or attended all the social events on campus, there was always so much to do.”

But it was peer and faculty relationships that really inspired her success — she would form study groups with her classmates, and became friendly with faculty who were accessible and knowledgeable. “Relationships with my professors were helpful. Especially in my senior year, they became my mentors and gave me the confidence I needed to land my first job with Procter and Gamble as a marketing representative,” she explains.

From there, MaHarry worked her way from account supervisor to account group manager at Young and Rubicam in New York City; she then moved to Marine Midland Bank (now HSBC) as an advertising and promotion manager. After that she worked at the advertising agency, PDL&C, as executive vice president for strategic planning. Her last job before landing at Brand Logic was ICE Communications — an integrated communications agency — where she was executive vice president and account director.

“Bryant’s well-rounded business curriculum always supported each step I took throughout my career,” says MaHarry. “Bryant prepared me for my career — no doubt.”

Alumnus Profile: Michael Fisher ’67

When Mike Fisher attended Bryant, he found an academic environment ideally suited to his needs. “When I graduated, I was well prepared to tackle the opportunities and challenges offered by virtually any business.”

Fisher has risen to the challenge and is now a managing director at Barclays Global Investors, N.A., in San Francisco. A native Californian, he first heard about Bryant while attending prep school in New Jersey. “In the 1950s, I clients,” said Fisher. “It’s challenging, fun, and very rewarding.”

Fisher currently serves on Bryant’s board of trustees, so he stays involved with what’s happening at his alma mater. “I just think Bryant is a very special place,” he said.

“Former Bryant President Bill Trueheart led Bryant to a higher academic plane, and Ronald Machtey has continued that work and more over the past decade.”
director at Barclays. “But engineering ‘dumbbells’ do not go to the service academies! When it was recommended that I pursue business-oriented academics instead, I decided to go to one of the three ‘B’ (business) specialty schools in New England that had been recommended to me in prep school,” he continued. “That’s how I made my way to the Bryant campus in Providence.”

Business seems to have been the right choice for Fisher. As a senior relationship officer at Barclays, which manages more than $1.8 trillion globally, he works closely with major clients to ensure they’re happy with the firm. “My responsibilities result in crossing virtually all business channels and product lines in being of service to our clients.”

Bryant welcomes new vice president

James Damron has been appointed vice president for university advancement at Bryant. He provides strategic direction and operational leadership for development, university relations, and alumni relations.

Damron’s 20-year career in fund raising and development includes leadership positions at Loyola University Chicago, the University of Chicago Medical Center, and most recently Seton Hall University. As associate vice president for university advancement at Seton Hall, he directed a $150 million campaign, working directly with the president, the senior leadership team, and other administrative and volunteer leaders. The campaign helped to shape and implement fund-raising strategies for all segments of the university, including eight schools and colleges, a seminary, athletics, and special centers.

While at the University of Chicago Medical Center, Damron managed fund raising for the Department of Medicine, the medical center’s largest department, and worked closely with the chairman of pediatrics/chief medical officer for the Children’s Hospital. He was responsible for fund raising at the University of Chicago’s hospitals, biological sciences division, and School of Medicine.

“Jim has an impressive array of skills, and he’s worked extensively with constituents in a variety of nonprofit institutions to develop, communicate, and execute strategic planning initiatives,” said President Ronald K. Machlty. “His proven abilities will be invaluable to the fund-raising program at Bryant as we expand scholarships and continue with campus improvements.”

“I am very excited to be joining Bryant University as vice president for university advancement,” said Damron. “There are many opportunities to advance the University through creative and effective initiatives in development, university relations, and alumni relations. I look forward to contributing to Bryant’s continued growth and working with members of the Bryant community whose efforts have made this such a vibrant academic institution.”

Tarang Patel '07 found interactions with alumni electrifying

It might not be uncommon to be offered a job after graduation based on your performance as an intern with that company. It is, however, impressive to be offered a full-time job with a Fortune 100 company even before the beginning of your senior year.

This is just the position Tarang Patel '07 of Glastonbury, Connecticut, found himself in the summer before his senior year at Bryant.

After a 10-week internship in General Electric's Financial Management Program, Patel was one of only four interns to be offered a full-time position at GE - quite an accomplishment a full year before graduation. He will start the two-year Financial Management Program in August of 2007 with aspirations of advancing up the corporate ladder to GE's corporate audit staff.

His goals do not stop there. "Hopefully one day I will become the CFO of one of GE's many businesses," he said.

Patel worked hard and showed initiative in his internship, but he acknowledged that the help of William Conary '67, the head of human resources at GE, was critical. "Mr. Conaty and I stayed in contact throughout my internship, and he gave me some great advice that will serve me well throughout my career," he said.

Patel's ties to Bryant alumni don't end there. "I have been on the Executive Committee of The Archway Investment Fund as well. Advice from alumni has been very helpful in our successful investments," he said.

The Archway Investment Fund closed at the end of the fall semester outperforming the S&P 500 benchmark by about 3.5 percent. "Many Bryant alumni, including John Burke '03, an investment analyst at Amica Insurance Company, have taken time out of their busy days to come in and speak to our class," said Patel. "Participating in The Archway Investment Fund has been a great experience, and I've learned significantly different aspects of finance and investments."

Patel has also been president of the Finance Association and vice president of the Accounting Association. "Alumni were always coming by to speak to us and help us create opportunities," he said. "Meeting with Robert Calabro '88, a tax partner at PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC), and participating in the PwC xTax program have also enhanced my experiences at Bryant."

The xTax program challenges teams of students from colleges across the country to examine a real-world tax case and present their recommendations. The teams are judged on critical thinking, presentation quality, and teamwork.

Patel is already establishing lifelong ties with his soon-to-be alma mater. He has founded The Dipak and Ila Patel Charitable Foundation in honor of his parents. The foundation will provide scholarships to deserving students in their pursuit of higher education. One scholarship will go to a Bryant student every fall starting in 2007.

A job at a Fortune 100 company, an officer for two different academic clubs, a member of a nationally competing tax team, and founder of a charitable organization. All this from a young man who hasn't graduated yet...we can't wait to see what he accomplishes after this May!
Faculty Spotlight: Michael Roberto

When asked about what it takes to be successful, Associate Professor of Management Michael Roberto doesn't talk about his education, even though he's earned a BA, an MBA, and a DBA from Harvard. He doesn't list his many impressive accomplishments and awards, or mention his acclaimed book, Why Great Leaders Don't Take Yes for an Answer.

Instead, he talks about what he gained from being the son of Italian immigrants. "My parents had a minimal amount of education and material wealth, but possessed an enormous sense of gratitude, humility, and passion for a better life in America," he recalls.

"They imbued a tremendous work ethic in me and a steadfast belief that education is the vehicle to success, even though neither of them had much education. They also instilled in my brother and me the importance of staying intellectually curious and maintaining a vigorous hunger for knowledge."

Roberto's brother, Tony, majored in accounting and is a member of Bryant's Class of 1983. "He is now Executive Director of the Connecticut Development Authority — an agency designed to provide debt financing and investment capital to help businesses grow in Connecticut."

Roberto is one of 12 faculty members who joined Bryant in the 2006-07 academic year. After six years as a Harvard business professor, he became very interested in Bryant after a visit to campus and a meeting with President Ron Machtley. "President Machtley not only had a vision, but he also had concrete, measurable goals and has realized many of them," said Roberto. "Not everyone can transform ideas into an actionable strategic plan and execute on it. That is a pretty compelling thing about Bryant."

As a management professor, Roberto uncovers lessons for business leaders from the lives and decisions of people such as Churchill, Eisenhower, and Lincoln. "I try to read quite broadly across a range of subjects, though history is one of my favorites. I don't believe it's productive to focus too narrowly on business books and articles."

His interdisciplinary view of management and business practices is reflected in Roberto's approach to education, research, and life. He sees that every area of life and academics informs everything else — a belief he found reflected in Bryant's academic programs. "One of the things that intrigued me about Bryant is that business students study liberal arts and the liberal arts students study business," Roberto said.

"You develop much stronger critical-thinking skills if you're forced to have that broader educational experience. You think differently in economics than you do in political science or marketing, And the ability to think differently is tremendously powerful."

In addition to being a dedicated scholar and educator, Roberto keeps the practice side of his work strong with a number of consulting, research, and writing projects. His book, Why Great Leaders Don't Take Yes for an Answer: Managing for Conflict and Consensus (Wharton Press, 2005), is a critical and commercial success. He's currently conducting research for a book on organizational failure and resilience, and may draw on the experiences of some Bryant alumni for the publication. "Coming back stronger after major setbacks is part of virtually every successful person's or organization's story," he observed.
Dust off your passports...we’re going to China!

The U.S.-China Institute at Bryant is organizing a trip to China for alumni in 2008. The tour will stop at three cities and absorb the sights, sounds, and tastes of the most populated country on earth. The trip, available to all alumni and their friends, will depart in August and travel the country for about two weeks.

First stop: Shanghai

With members of the U.S.-China Institute as your guides, you’ll visit a number of Shanghai cultural attractions and learn more about China’s largest city and the eighth-largest city in the world, widely regarded as the center of China’s modern economy. In addition to seeing the sights and dining at some of the best restaurants, you and the rest of the Bryant alumni group will also have a chance to take part in one of Shanghai’s favorite pastimes – shopping. You can have custom clothing made or buy a number of novelty items in the malls and stores. Your guides will have valuable advice and tips to make shopping in and exploring throughout China a pleasurable experience.

Next stop: Xi’an

You’ll then travel to Xi’an (pronounced shee-ahn), which holds an important position as a famed historical and cultural city and one of China’s six major ancient capitals. Xi’an is where the Qin army defeated its rivals and became the first centralized autocracy in China’s history. You’ll gain privileged access to the famous Terracotta Warrior Army of First Emperor Qin Shi Huang. Often cited as the Eighth Great Wonder of the World, the Terracotta Army is a collection of 8,099 life-sized terracotta warriors and horses that were buried with the First Emperor of Qin in 210-209 B.C. in order to help him rule an empire in the afterlife. You’ll visit places of the Hui (pronounced h’way) people, a Chinese minority whose ethnicity is based on their Islamic practices, and temples and pagodas in Xi’an.

Last stop: Beijing

Finally, you’ll have exclusive seating at a number of Olympic events in Beijing. Beijing, formerly known as Peking, is recognized as the political, educational, and cultural center of China, and is the host of the 2008 Summer Olympics. You’ll attend select events and cheer for the USA first-hand. After that, you’ll see the famous Great Wall at Badaling, which is preserved as a historical monument, and remains one of the most popular tourist attractions in the world. In addition, you’ll explore the Forbidden City, which comprises close to 200 acres and 800 buildings, and Summer Palace, the archetypal Chinese garden.

Details about this trip will be available soon. For those interested in the event, please contact the U.S.-China Institute at china@bryant.edu, or (401) 232-6883.
Link up with current students or other alumni today!

The Amica Center for Career Education has gone online with its Alumni Career Network. The new tool – Bryant Alumni Career Link – allows alumni to use their career knowledge and experience to help undergraduate students and other alumni with career plans.

You decide what level of assistance you want to provide. The options include:

- Providing informational interviews by phone, e-mail, or in person
- Sharing information on your company and industry
- Providing a shadow opportunity at your place of work
- Participating in Career Center programs and events
- Offering assistance with summer jobs, internships, or full-time job search
- You can choose to discontinue your volunteer role at any time by simply updating that part of your profile.

The Bryant Alumni Career Link can be found at: https://www.eventmanagement.com/bryant. To create an account, e-mail Jennifer Edwards, assistant director in the Amica Center for Career Education, at jedwards@bryant.edu with your name and graduation year (please include maiden name if applicable), and she will provide you with a verification ID.
