Wells,

I received a letter from my mother a week ago in which she told me that you had sent a package to me and had not yet received any acknowledgment for the gift.

I'm really sorry that there has been such a delay, but except I have not received the gift. Since I last wrote, I have had a change of address and my mail since October 1st has been more or less fragmentary, but eventually I expect to call it out of with me, and in the meantime will I can do in with.

Despite the fact that I have not as yet received the package I write to you because I appreciate your kindness in thinking of me and the other boys in the living at a number make me feel good and very close indeed, and when I receive the package I shall gladly acknowledge it.

On Saturday evening, I am unable to tell you of where I am or the type of work I am doing, so please excuse the lack of details until after the war and the war is over, I hope, not to distant future.

Again, thanks for your kindness and the best of love to your wonderful mother.
Sincerely yours,
