

Touching my Reflection

MICHELE HEATHER POLLOCK

I peer into a mirror
of last night's rain,

pieces of the sky
gathered on the ground.

The face I see
is somehow sharp
as glass,
more real than my own

so I lean forward
until my nose is wet, until my eyes and chin feel the ripples of themselves and I keep going,

turning inside out
into the sky.