BULLETIN of BRYANT COLLEGE

JANUARY, 1965

Bryant Achieves Regional Accreditation

Bryant College received accreditation from the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at the 79th annual meeting of the regional group in Boston on Friday, December 4.

This announcement has brought our College into the position of maintaining levels of admission and building a deeper and broadened program of study.

In an editorial on December 13 in the Providence Sunday Journal entitled "A Fine Yule for Bryant College," lies the summation of it all.

"No greater Christmas present could have been given to a school which has earned by indefatigable improvement the right to stand with pride among the recognized educational leaders of America. But we who know Bryant also know this: Its latest honors will simply challenge it to greater things in a rich and rewarding future."

We are also reprinting on page two excerpts from an article written by Leonard B. Stevens, Journal-Bulletin Education Writer, that appeared in the same edition of the Journal.

GIFTS TO LIBRARY

The Providence Chapter of the National Association of Accountants has provided the College library with binders including the past five years of N.A.A. Bulletins and topic indices for the period.

Mr. Jay Lawrence, President of the Providence Chapter of N.A.A., and his board of directors are responsible for this useful gift.

Also, through Miss Lorraine Leaney

'40, of the Providence office of Kidder, Peabody & Company, recent copies of Moody's; Investment Companies, Mutual Funds and Other Types; and Johnson's Investment Company Charts have been placed in the Library.

A new microfilm reader and microfilms of The New York Times are now in the Library, thanks to alumni who participated in the Alumni Annual Giving program.

BRYANT HOSTS HIGH SCHOOL COACHES CLINIC

Coaches from all of the high schools in Rhode Island were guests of the Bryant College Athletic Association for a basketball rules interpretation clinic in October.

Coach Tom Duffy of Bryant was master of ceremonies at a dinner-meeting for 85 coaches in the College Dining Hall.

After dinner a meeting and clinic were conducted in the gym.

The Bryant Indians have had a brisk season, winning three and losing two. On February 18 the Indians will face the Curry College Colonels at 6:45 p.m. in the Rhode Island Auditorium preliminary to the Boston Celtics-St. Louis Hawks game.

The Bryant College lecture series will have David Schoenbrun of the NBC News staff in Paris as the speaker on Thursday, February 18 at 8:00 p.m. in the Auditorium.

No tickets are required and alumni are invited. Previous speakers were Dr. Edmund Booth of Dartmouth College and Dr. Robert Ascher of Cornell.

He holds a M.S. in Ed. from URI and a Ed.D from Harvard Graduate School of education and is married to Vera (Lindberg) '44.

In addition to her Bryant degree, Vera holds a B.S. degree from URI, a Ed.M. from Harvard Graduate School of Education, and has been studying at Boston University towards her Certificate of Advanced Graduate Study.

He has been assistant professor at Framingham State College in Massachusetts and she has been a faculty member and counselor at Wellesley Jr. High School, Wellesley, Massachusetts.

By LEONARD B. STEVENS, Journal-Bulletin Education Writer

Bryant College, one of the East Side's three sister institutions of higher learning, stepped into a new circle of academic prestige nine days ago when it was voted accreditation by the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the regional accrediting group in the six-state New England area.

Accreditation is a major step for any institution. But it is all the more welcomed by the smaller colleges in this country, who by their very nature and size, frequently find accrediting requirements a long reach. Bryant was rejected by the association when it sought accreditation once before.

Changing Times

What has happened at Bryant mirrors what has happened to numerous institutions of higher education in the United States in recent years. College enrollments have been increasing sharply and are expected to continue to rise, from more than five million today to about 10 million by 1980, according to one recent estimate. At the same time, the nation's colleges and universities are changing, modifying and growing in an effort to keep up with new and different requirements and needs. In many cases, the heightened demand for admission has enabled small colleges to prosper and expand.

Bryant, now at the start of its second century, started out as a skill school in the commerce-financial field. It was, in today's terminology, a kind of vocational school. It gave aspiring secretaries and businessmen the specific tools they needed to start earning a living.

Today, Bryant is more than that, with liberal arts subjects taking up half a student's time. Safely past the accreditation barrier, its officials are now talking about the possibility of establishing a Bureau of Economic and Business Research, similar to the Bureau of Government Research at the University of Rhode Island.

There is talk of a graduate school, possibly in hotel management or hospital administration. There are plans for a major campus development program, and the teaching of foreign languages. And there is hope in the admissions office for an academically upgraded student body as the result of the recent accreditation.

The broadening of the curriculum in recent years (four years ago only one required course out of every four was in the liberal arts; today the requirement is two in four), coupled with the accreditation, however, is apparently not to be the signal for Bryant's transmutation into a pure liberal arts college, Dr. E. Gardner Jacobs, Bryant president, declared last week.

Place for Bryant

The school, he asserted, now is strengthened as a specialized college by the accreditation, but top officials say they fully intend Bryant to retain its original business education orientation.

In an interview last week Dr. Jacobs said he believes there is a place "in the educational scheme of things" for institutions like Bryant which train students for specific work in the modern world. The strengthened liberal arts part of the curriculum, the president noted, is an adaptation to today's business world rather than a deliberate imitation of more traditional and prestigious institutions' requirements. The original purpose and goals remain.

The accreditation undoubtedly will enhance Bryant's chances of achieving those goals, by easing the difficulty of attracting topflight students and faculty members, opening the door to financial help from the foundations and, in general, giving a major boost to the prestige of both the school and its graduates.

"Without the accreditation, an institution is handicapped," Dr. Jacobs observed. A few moments later he remarked that Bryant now is seeking a national reputation in the business field of education, and the accreditation obviously is a key to that hope.

Accreditation is the result of 14 years of personal effort on Dr. Jacobs' part, six years of concerted institutional work, and two visits by inspection teams from the New England Association.

The first visit was in 1961. The recommendations which came out of the review were matched by modification and change. The result was accreditation, three years later.

Among the key changes which led to approval were the broadening of the curriculum, the expansion of the college library ("an increase of 26,000 volumes in six years," said Dr. Jacobs) and an upgraded faculty.

The 1,500-student enrollment of today will grow eventually to about 2,000 officials say. The plan is to increase the percentage of the student body living on or near the campus (now about 45 per cent) and to draw more out-of-state students.

The accreditation, on-campus living and more varied geographic distribution in student backgrounds will help upgrade the student body, officials claim. They noted that the accreditation alone should mean that Bryant no longer will be the third or fourth choice of college applicants but that it will become, in more cases, an applicant's first choice.
