

What Happens to Kurt Cobain

WILLIAM SNYDER JR.

Courtney Love carries Kurt Cobain's ashes on the jets she flies in. And into Pizza Huts, Ramada lobbies, Winn Dixies for Diet Cokes. To Camden, Tampa, Tokyo Courtney Love totes the ashes in a teddy bear pack – maybe Francis Bean's. "To find a resting place," she says. Courtney Love travels and travels. With Hole. Alone. She left some of Kurt Cobain's ashes in a monastery in Ithaca. Shaped to a cone by monks, they wait for further word. An airport guard in Dallas watches Courtney Love and the teddy-bag, the dark chunk inside floating across the screen. The guard sniffs puffs of ashes-smoke. "What's this?" he demands. "That's my husband," Courtney Love replies. "But most of him's in New York."
