Sunday
18/20

Dear Mom,

Sunday, the day of rest, was time all day!
Breakfast at eight, a short swim, a short nap before dinner,
which was fried chicken,
then more sun time.
What a life!

Tomorrow I start working, though. I hope it's clear, as it has been raining all day today.
I take my first flight tomorrow, as you know.

If I can solo, it will come between my 10th and 15th hour, as my instructor requires. Solo's anyone before the 10th hour.
The underclassmen can't wear wings on their overseas caps 'til they have soloed, and if they ground loop, they have to set the wings at a 45° angle, and increase it 45° for every ground loop. Also, we can't wear our goggles on our forehead 'til we solo, we have to keep them around our neck. And if we can't solo, well that is just "T.S."

As my course progressed, I began to do aerobatics, loops, immelmanns, and so forth. I also got six hours in the Link trainer. That's
The machine that is used to simulate night or instrument flight. You've probably seen it in the movies; it's a small squarish contraption on a stand, the course of the simulated flight is recorded electrically.

I'll be able to go to town next weekend, as I'm only quarantined for ten days here. The town is supposed to be terrific. They're about 15,000 kids about 30 miles from here in boot camp, oh man!

How are you feeling honey? Have you taken those X-rays yet?
not you better do
it soon, that's an order, beautiful!

I love you honey, give my love to all at home.

Goodnight, sweetheart.

Your devoted son,
