Coach Drury Removes Arnemann and Fritz From Basketball Team

Maryann Seledyn
Archway Staff Writer

In a move that Men's Head Basketball Coach Leon Drury cited as a "disciplinary decision," junior Bob Arnemann and sophomore Bob Fritz were released from the team on January 26. The decision was made following incidents during the St. Michael's game on January 24.

Although Drury refused to comment on the reason for either players' dismissal, saying "that's between the players and myself," the expulsion of Arnemann stemmed from Arnemann's refusal to play in the St. Michael's game. Arnemann, a one time starter who this season had been demoted to a secondary role, refused Drury's request to go into the game when Bryant was down by approximately 40 points with just minutes to play. Because of his decision not to play, Drury notified Arnemann two days later that he would no longer be a member of the team.

In the case of Fritz, Drury told him that his role on the team was to be a supportive one, meaning that

Bryant's 1988-89 Men's Basketball Team

Fritz's primary job was to encourage the other players and congratulate them when they came off the floor, not to play substantial minutes. During the St. Michael's game, Drury reportedly observed Fritz not being supportive of his teammates or enthusiastic about the game. Drury concluded that Fritz was not fulfilling his role on the team and therefore dismissed Fritz from the team.

When asked how the departure of the two players affected the team, Drury commented that there were no negative results. He further stated that having the roster reduced from sixteen to fourteen players produced a more "workable team" and that he could now spend more time with the other players.

GLC Hosts Hazing Speaker

by Robyn C. Brown
Archway Staff Writer

The Greek Letter Council hosted a guest speaker on hazing on February 2, 1989 in the Janikies Auditorium. The speaker, Eileen Stevens, spoke on the consequences of hazing after her son, Chuck, was killed in 1978 at Alfred University as a result of acute alcohol poisoning caused by a hazing incident that occurred on the campus.

Eileen Stevens suffered the loss of her son at Alfred University when he was 20 years old. Her son was pledging a fraternity on campus and during the pledging period, was forced to spend the night locked in an automobile trunk and consume a half pint of Jack Daniels, a large amount of wine and a six pack of beer. A combination of freezing temperatures and alcohol induced cardiac arrest, and Chuck was soon pronounced dead after being rushed to a New York hospital.

The incident in which her son was killed was called an "accident" by the school administration. Several other pledges were left in critical condition. "Accident" was the wrong word for this incident. Quoting Ms. Stevens, this was a "planned, premeditated activity" that took place every semester.

In her anger and devastation, Ms. Stevens formed CHUCK, which stands for Committee to Halt Useless College Killings. The ultimate goal of this organization is to eliminate hazing practices that are dangerous in nature and to promote national awareness of hazing and its consequences.

"Nobody should be asked to receive degrading treatment or compromise their dignity," quoted Ms. Stevens. "Fraternities and Sororities stand for leadership, sister/brotherhood, and pride. It does not stand for secrecy or peer pressure."

The message that she brought out was not anti-fraternity or anti-sorority. In fact, it was just the opposite. She has spent time talking with sororities and fraternities across the country and has learned a lot about what they stand for.

Her speech received a standing ovation. The Bryant audience, consisting of all the sororities and fraternities and interested students, were very emotional during the speech and showed their appreciation for her efforts. We were very pleased to have her at Bryant. "Pledging should not result in tragedy."

Public Safety Secures 650 Spot Parking Lot with Hi-Tech Surveillance Equipment

Lisa Antoninich
Archway Staff Writer

"As of February 13th, if you must park your vehicle in the commuter lot, overnight parking that is after midnight, will only be allowed in the section closest to the athletic fields," indicated Richard Wheeler, Director of Public Safety. "This is the only area of the commuter lot that will accommodate the 650 resident students who park in the commuter lots overnight," stated Wheeler. This section of the commuter lot will be equipped with additional lighting, a 24-hour surveillance camera system, and an emergency call box.

Wheeler reassured, "we are attempting to provide the safest possible environment for the Bryant community." The new high-tech camera surveillance system should virtually eliminate vandalism and discourage other serious crimes from occurring against persons and property by enabling Public Safety to monitor the lot 24 hours a day. "The four cameras utilized have the capability of recording a vehicle's registration plate at 100 yards and can rotate 360 degrees," indicated Wheeler. "Resident students would have first choice in parking their vehicles in the most secure area on campus," he said, "since this will be the only part of the commuter lot utilized for overnight parking." Overnight guests who have to park in the commuter lot will also be expected to comply with this policy.

A recent survey shows that 600 students park nightly in the commuter lot. In inclement weather, snow removal is hampered by sporadic parking across the entire lot. "This new parking arrangement will alleviate that problem," stated Wheeler.

The emergency call box is also a first for Bryant with more being planned for the future. This unit will be located at the edge of the commuter lot and will be identified at night by a blue light which will oscillate when activated. Once activated, it sends an alarm to the Public Safety Office which, in turn, will dispatch a mobile unit to investigate. The emergency call box also provides two-way communication between the caller and the Public Safety Office, in the event that a student would like an escort to his/her dorm.

"We hope that the Bryant community will utilize this new communication system whenever our assistance is needed," said Wheeler.

Public Safety would like a representative from each facet of the Bryant Community to be involved in Bryant's Crime Watch Committee.

The Governor's Justice Commission, in conjunction with the Rhode Island Crime Prevention Officers' Association, will hold a conference entitled "CRIME PREVENTION IN RHODE ISLAND: MOVING INTO A NEW DECADE" on Saturday, February 25, 1989, 8:30 a.m. — 4:00 p.m., at the Holiday Inn at the Crossings, Warwick, RI.

There are eight slots available for representatives from Bryant College. Anyone who wishes to participate should contact Chief Wheeler as soon as possible (232-6001).

OPINION

Fire Alarm Solution Remains Faulty

Over winter break, the Smithfield Town Council passed an ordinance regarding fire alarms on the Bryant campus. This was done in response to the large number of alarms that the fire department answered last year. What this means for Bryant students is that they will have to pay for false alarms.

Of the 141 alarms answered, approximately 50% were false. These included pulled alarms, smoke-triggered alarms, and blocked heat sensors. The other half were due to actual fires and faulty mechanisms. There are 4,500 alarm devices on campus, consisting of pull alarms, heat sensors, and smoke sensors.

According to the ordinance, Smithfield will directly charge Bryant $400 for each alarm. Students will have to pay a portion of the fine for false alarms. For example, if an alarm is pulled in Dorm 11, and no one is apprehended, the fine will be divided among the residents of that dorm.

Fire alarms clearly pose problems. They inconvenience residents, put firefighters at risk, and practically ensure that the system won't work well when needed most.

If a person is off campus at the time an alarm goes off, should that person have to pay a portion of the fine? Do the residents have to pay if the perpetrator lives in another dorm? Will students have to pay if an alarm goes off in a building other than a dorm?

The reasonable answer to these questions is: certainly not. It doesn't make sense to hold one person responsible for the immature actions of others.

Imagine for a moment that you are an alarm-puller. If pulling an alarm was fun before, then it's even more fun now. Besides just throwing fellow students out in the cold for an hour (or longer), you make them pay for it.

This so-called solution does not solve the problem. Instead, it provides the school with a convenient way to dispense fines instead of justice.

LETTERS

Congratulations to the GLC on a Golden Job Well Done

To the Editor:

Last Thursday, I attended the presentation by Mrs. Eileen Stevens, founder of the Committee to Halt Useless College Killings (CHUCK).

I am pleased and proud of the initiative taken by the Greek Letter Council to educate their fellow students about the dangers of hazing. I applaud the decision to invite Mrs. Stevens to campus and the generosity of the GLC in making a donation to assist CHUCK in continuing its important educational programs.

Mrs. Stevens was eloquent and moving. Equally moving was our audience's heartfelt standing ovation.

Congratulations to Doug Boesch and the GLC!

William E. Trueheart
Executive Vice President

To the Editor:

Eileen Stevens' talk on "hazing" was surely a "leap" in the right direction. Thanks and congratulations to Doug Boesch, John Frasse, the Greek Letter Council and Kappa Delta Rho fraternity for an outstanding beginning to this year's pledge period.

Sincerely,
Dr. Ed Golden
Dean of Student Life

SPB Thanks Commuter Connection

Dear Commuter Connection:

On behalf of the Student Programming Board, I would like to thank your organization for all of the time and effort you spent to make "The Philtres" concert a great success. Your dedication, leadership, and sense of teamwork contributed to a well executed concert, despite the poor attendance of Bryant students. A special thanks goes to the President of the Commuter Connection, Paul Laverdiere, for his personal efforts to coordinate the show.

Sincerely,
Melissa Lolli
Member of SPB

The snow is finally here. Get psyched to ski and join the Bryant Ski Club to watch the movie Hot Dog on Sunday, Feb. 12th at 9 pm. Special ski event to be announced.

Bryant Campus is Dead; Poor Turnout for Free Philtres Concert

To the Editor:

Last Friday the Commuter Connection and the Student Programming Board co-sponsored "The Philtres," a local band that has been hot on the club circuit. Well the turnout was not at all what either club had expected. At 9:00 pm the band was scheduled to play, but due to the poor turnout, a group of people containing members of both clubs went to the Freshmen dorms to remind people to go to the concert, which incidentally was FREE.

I was included in the group going to gather people for the concert. We went to every door in dorm 14, the responses we got were pitiful. One obnoxious freshman responded to my request with "You people are trying to make Bryant College an exciting place, well I have news for you. It's not!" Well this is just the type of attitude that keeps it from being "an exciting place."

The event was made non-alcoholic to reach all age groups but during my quest through the freshmen dorm, there was a girl who was in one of the lounges, who was extremely intoxicated who, when asked, held up her cup and said "Can I bring my cup?" No was the obvious response. "Well then F... off."

The Philtres were a little disappointed with the turnout, but never the less delivered a great show. They told me that just last week they went to Salve Regina College, which had the reputation of a "Dead Campus," produced a turnout of a whopping 600. I think the reality of a "Dead Campus" is no further than your own dorm.

The groups that sponsored this worked extremely hard, arranging the concert, advertising, and working at the event. These people do not get paid, they don't have to do it, but they care about the school and want to make a difference. These are the true leaders of the school, these are the type of people who will lead a successful career. But for the those of you who would rather sit, watch, and ridicule those who do, you will never get ahead with that attitude.

In spite of the disappointments, we would like to thank all those involved with this event, who made a concerted effort to make Bryant College a better place.

Sincerely,
Stephen Clark
Paul Laverdiere

Peace And Quiet Are Students' Rights, Too

by John Silber
President, Boston University

Earlier this year, Boston University proposed new regulations limiting overnight visiting in our dormitories and controlling alcohol use. These proposed regulations were greeted with strident objections by those who viewed them as an infringement on students' rights as "adults." Properly understood, however, these new regulations are a defense of fundamental rights, such as the right to privacy and the right to study. The problems at Boston University that led to these regulations are not local; they are widespread and grounded in the recent history of the American university.

Thirty years ago, most colleges and universities unashamedly stood in the relation to their students known as in loco parentis -- a Latin phrase meaning "in the position of a parent." This relation was most obviously manifested in living arrangements. Dormitories were sexually segregated, and there were elaborate regulations governing their use which came to be known as "parietals," another Latinism meaning "within the walls." Curfews ensured that female students at least were in for the night by a decorous hour -- perhaps 11:00 p.m. during the week and 1:00 a.m. on the weekend. And if they did not spend the night in the dormitory, they were required to sign themselves out to a specific and approved alternative location.

Beginning in the 1960s these regulations were swept away. Students were reclassified as adult, to be free of parental regulations whether literal or metaphorical. In the area of sex, a so-called revolution attenuated even self-regulation. None of these changes would necessarily have affected the quality of life in college dormitories had college students universally or even predominantly conducted the general population. I do know many students were outraged at being made unwilling audiences of their roommates' sexual behavior.

The offending roommates insisted on their rights as adults, which they interpreted as broadly as needed to cover their escapades. It is clear that such behavior is not an expression of freedom but of license. Unfortunately, the English language lacks a term meaning "one who has reached the age of majority while remaining an adolescent."

This term would not properly apply to all college students, most of whom fully merit the label of "adult." But it is clear that some do not.

themselves with the sort of consideration for others that was once assumed the mark of maturity.

At the same time, the rise of rock music introduced a new vehicle for inconsiderate behavior. College students began arriving in dormitories with the electronic capability to destroy the peace and quiet that are essential to intellectual work. There could hardly be a better example of technology rapidly outrunning the ethics that ought to have guided its use.

As President of a university, I began to receive complaints from students that their roommates were moving in "Significant Others" for occasional nights, or sometimes, for every night. I suspect the proportion of willing voyeurs is no greater among college students than among

At Boston University, we are committed to the proposition that the dormitories are an extension of our educational program. We do not require upperclassmen to live in dormitories, but we are determined that for those who live there, our dormitories offer an environment that is supportive of education rather than actively hostile to it. In furtherance of this commitment, we have developed regulations that will effectively limit noise pollution and drunkenness and remove involuntary voyeurism as an incident of college life.

Africa - A Hot Place to do Business

The Export Assistance Center at Bryant College presents on Feb. 24 an international trade seminar on "How to do Business in Africa."

The seminar runs from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Janikies Auditorium. It will help business operators to uncover export opportunities and do business in as many as 46 African countries.

Africa, one of the world's fastest growing marketplaces, offers more than ten percent of the world population and more than 25 cities with at least one million inhabitants. Among the products and services in demand are textiles and furniture goods, telecommunications, food preservation, construction equipment and building materials, and pharmaceutical and hospital supplies.

Representative from the U.S. Department of Commerce, several African countries, and the seminar's organizing consultants, Wood, Taylor, Onasanya & Associates

International, Inc., of Providence, will lead the panel discussions and sessions. They will discuss the identification of African markets, the organization of activities in African nations, the documentation requirements for import and export, and the financial requirements, funding methods, and exchange procedures for individual countries. Also, the representatives will be available to discuss export opportunities individually during and immediately after a luncheon.

Cost of the seminar is $50. For more information or to register, call the Export Assistance Center at 232-6111.

The export center is operated by the Rhode Island Small Business Development Center at Bryant. It assists firms in defining, developing, and enhancing export opportunities through low-cost seminars, free consultants, and an internal database of information on world markets.

Nutrition and the College Athlete

by Teresa Daigle
Health Services

Athletes often question the role of diet in their performance. The following are some tips for athletes.

The most easily utilized sources of extra calories are carbohydrates (starch) during intense activity and fats during moderate activity. In no case is the need for protein increased for any kind of athletics. Protein is poorly used for energy, and a high protein diet can even impair endurance.

Adequate fluid intake is critical for best athletic performance. The body cannot be conditioned to function without sufficient water.

Loss of sodium (salt) is rarely a problem but loss of potassium and magnesium can be a great problem if one perspires extensively. Unless these are replaced, performance suffers. Good sources of potassium are fruits and fruit juices, especially oranges. Magnesium is found in nuts and whole wheat breads and cereals, as well as in green vegetables.

The use of sugar or candy just before competition is now known to harm performance. However, a dilute solution of orange juice after the start of the competition can have a beneficial effect in terms of water and energy supply.

If you have any questions about this or have other athletic health concerns, stop by the Health Services in Dorm 6 to see Lois Royal, a nurse with expertise in sports medicine.

Chaplain's Corner Homeless in America a National Shame

by Fr. David Norris
Catholic Chaplain

"What I Did During Winter Break - Part II"

Not all of January was spent in work, work, work. Even though much time was taken up, as I wrote last week, by a search process for new chaplains at Brown University and the University of Rhode Island, I did get to enjoy some vacation time. And I got to spend it in one of my favorite cities (besides the newly-named "hot" city of Providence!): New Orleans.

Truly "a feast for all the senses," this unique southern city was the site for the Catholic Campus Ministry Association's 20th anniversary celebration and first national convention. Workshops, keynote speakers, and special worship services did not prevent the more than six hundred college chaplains from taking in the sights and sounds of the Crescent City.

Mingled amid the music, crowds and smells, however, was a not so pleasant reality which even a short-term tourist couldn't help noticing: street people. Each time I walked down a street, at least two individuals would approach with stories designed to get money. Some stories were quite creative, such as the young man who did a snappy routine designed to let him shine my shoes for three dollars. Other approaches were less entertaining, more direct: "I haven't eaten in three days; can you help me out?"

These entrepreneurs of the sidewalk, sleeping in department store doorways and lining the curbs by day and night, were a visible reminder of the serious economic problems of that particular state and city. They were also a graphic symbol of, a direct contact with, what is often experienced as cold statistics: the homeless people of America. Sounds ironic, doesn't it: "Homeless of America"? "Give me your tired, your poor..." says the quote on the base of the Statue of Liberty. Well, we've got them! And it is a national shame.

It is easy to overlook or ignore this "problem" until statistics take on a human face in a homeless mother and her child sitting in a cardboard box as a shelter against a cold February wind. The warm climate of a southern city, or even the relatively mild winter so far in our area of the country, should not serve as excuses to ease our consciences on this matter. These people, whether we encounter them in our daily travels or not, are here around us: in New Orleans, New York, Boston, Providence, Hartford and in your home town or the largest city nearest to it. The remain a challenge to our "kinder, gentler nation", from the highest echelons of government to a college student preparing for a career in business. They give a direct test for the integrity of the words of the prayer offered by President Bush at his inauguration: "Heavenly Father... write on our hearts these words: 'Use power to help people.' For we are given power not to advance our own purposes but to make a great show in the world, nor a name. There is but one just use of power and it is to serve people. Help us remember, Lord. Amen."

Around Campus

Don Desfosse
Archway Staff Writer

"Hi. What's up?"
"Hey, what's happening?"
"How're you doing?"
"What's going on?"

These questions are asked thousands of times each day on this campus and practically everywhere else in the world. But how often do we answer these questions seriously?

"Hi. What's up?"

The usual answer: "Not much." or "Nothing." or a quick grunt. I must have totally blown someone's mind when I answered that question the other day: "The simple interest rates on a home mortgage." "I don't know whether the answer I gave 'clicked' or not because the person just kept walking away. Of course, the sky could be considered up, as could the ceiling, the birds in the sky, and a positive-minded person. You just don't get those type of answers very often.

"Hey, what's happening?"

"Well, there's a basketball game on channel 7, there's a meeting of the Scuba Club in the Bryant Center, WJMF is playing a great song, fraternities and sororities are pledging, and there's a plane flying overhead." I have a feeling, however, that by the time I said the words "channel 7," the other party would be long gone, perhaps thinking about what might be happening later on that evening.

"How're you doing?"

"I'm glad you asked. I have a splitting headache, the hangnail on my left thumb is getting worse, my leg muscles hurt, and this cold just isn't getting better." I wonder how the person would respond if I let that string of health imperfections enter into conversation.

"What's going on?"

"Since you asked, I'm about to turn on the light in the bathroom, then I'll turn on the TV and watch it for a while, and then I'll probably turn on my iron to get a shirt ready for tomorrow."

OK, so maybe these questions weren't made to be answered.

The Trouble With Some Pets

by Michael Cain

I hate my cat. It didn't start out that way but this cat is different. It does all the annoying things I don't like about cats and above all she is utterly stupid.

I love football season. Grab some chips, dip and soda and watch my favorite teams overcome defeat. I am one of those sport fans that likes to physically act out the game. When small little animals are in the room I am tempted on fourth and 10, and definitely longer, to punt them. I simply walk up to my cat and say, "hey kitty-cat, its fourth and 10, what should I do?" "Meow," is her reply. Assuming that's a yes, I take off to kick her forty yards down field but a family member usually stops me from living out my football dreams.

I don't like my cat "Tiger." Her hair is way too long. She leaves most of it where she was sitting in the summer. She also gets millions of fleas in the summer, but most of all I despise her like any other small creature because of her uncanny stupidity.

When cats get playful or sassy they do strange things. Well my cat starts attacking anything including my naked feet for fun and excitement.

Another testament to her stupidity came one day when I was in a rush, so I jumped into my car only to find the kitty sleeping on the hood. I assumed that when the engine started that she would get frightened and jump off the car. So I started up the engine but the stupid feline went back to sleep. So then I put my 76 Pontiac into gear and backed out slowly. No reaction. I thought to myself this cat has no brain. I got out of the car but the cat refused to get off the hood. I thought to myself that I had tried and got back into the car and proceeded to drive down the street with Kitty attached to the hood. I think the cat was actually enjoying the ride or the strong breeze over the car. The only reaction I got from the kitty was when I stepped on the brakes. I got out again but this time she jumped right off the hood without argument. Next time I'm not stopping.

I like to tease my cat by turning on the can opener and watch the cat come running only to discover that it's a joke. Sometimes I open up the cupboard where we keep her cat food and she walks in hoping to get food. I simply shut the cupboard.

My girlfriend has this little mutt dog that also gets on my nerves. Her name is Misty, Mist for short. She looks like an old man because of her black coat and white food stained whiskers. Her pleasant personality is only matched by her ineptness. She is one of those dogs that chases her own tail. "She's a guard dog," they tell me. The next time a cat or another dog comes to rob your house, she will bark to let you know.

Another odd thing about Misty is that she does not eat dog food but she eats anything and everything else. Underwear, plastic cups and toilet paper are her favorite. Her nickname is "cheese-dog." She waits by the table at dinner time waiting for the leftovers. Her food bowl sits in the corner brimming with untouched dog food.

I think I've found the answer to this dog. Misty wants to be human.

Comedian Jerry Seinfeld says that, "Dogs have no life. And do you want to know why dogs have no life? Dogs have no money. No money, no life."

"No, No Misty. You have no money and therefore no life. You cannot be human." I tell her. She looks at me with her cute dark eyes and cocks her head to one side. Maybe she knows something I don't. I think I will introduce Misty to my cat.

Here, Hold This

by Stephanie Brush
Washington Post Writers Group

My entire childhood was spent impersonating the Statue of Liberty.

My dad was a graduate of the "Here, Hold This..." school of home repair. He was very clever with tools. But a man who is clever with tools needs to have a knave—a "factotum"—a flunky who will be willing to act as his loyal, ever-stupid assistant. My Dad had no sons, so I was honored to fill in this slot.

"Here, hold this," he would say. It was usually while he was installing some complex light fixture under the most bat-infested eave of the attic. It was my job to stand on one foot, holding my breath, jamming two microscopic wires into place, with my left arm wrapped three or four times around my collarbone, while shredded plaster rained down on my eyelashes. "Don't move," he would say.

Then he would take my sisters out for pizza. ("Heck, but I got the quality time," I would think.)

This is a column anyone can understand, regardless of sex. This is an apology-column to men, really. People still blunder in thinking tool-dexterity is one of those mystically sex-linked traits: that a man came out of the womb, bellowing, "I'd like the complete Sears Craftsman set; don't bother to gift-wrap it."

When in fact, tool-use, and the enjoyment of same, has got to be environmental: You either have a Dad who says, "Why don't you go out and build a little condo now, Jimmy? Use my tools." Or you have a "Here, Hold This..." kind of Dad.

My home is inhabited by both a male and a female from this latter category. What this means is that, when we call one of those home-resuscitation companies on the phone and say, "Can you give us an hourly estimate?" we have resigned ourselves to swallowing hard and agreeing to any total they care to toss at us.

I made the mistake of thinking that a man would just bring up "By the way, I'm tool-retarded" on a first date, so that I would know what I was letting myself in for.

Men are every bit as self-conscious and heartbroken (although they'll never say it aloud) about this failing as they are about that bare spot on the tops of their heads. You know that spot that used to be the size of a half-dollar and is now about the diameter of the mother ship in "Close Encounters."

For years, I would lunk-headedly invite men over on a first date and say, "Hi, here is some spaghetti for you to eat. But first, I have a dead rodent in the closet which I would like you to neatly extricate from a mouse trap for me." And then I would be amazed when they were not somehow flattered by my request (figuring that the combination of "gadgets" and "deceased animals" was somehow unbeatable).

Over the years, I've discovered that you DO learn a number of important skills when you Dad gives you the rear-guard position in home repair, such as Advanced Humming. Bob and I both hum spectacularly well. This is useful during the adjunct phase to "Here, hold this." Which is, "here, wait in the car." This occurs when Dad has run out of parts and needs to make an emergency run to the hardware store. I composed an entire opera once, while waiting in the car—about twelve acts long, in Sanskrit. My Dad returned to the car, just as the invisible audience was rising to its feet.

As an adult, I can see how frustrating it is when you know you can do something better and faster and more efficiently than someone else. But what I miss more than not having been taught how to DO, is not having been taught how to TEACH.

I recently spent a day with a three-year-old named Brian, and asked him if he knew how to write his name. "Little does he know that I'm a professional at this," I thought, as I grabbed the pencil from him, at about the "R."

He was relieved, too: that was the thing. I could see it in his face. I shoved the pencil back in his hand. "Here," I said. "HOLD this."

Hodgson Memorial Library

It's tax time again! This is the season of the year when many of us take stock of our personal finances, both the practical and the long range aspects.

FOR THE PRACTICAL:

The library has arranged a more prominent display of tax forms this year. On the table near the globe in the reference department, you will find an array of tax forms and instruction booklets in a free-standing display rack. These federal tax forms may be taken for your personal use. If you look to the left of the display you will also see giveaway copies of both resident and non-resident forms/instruction for Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

As the weeks spin by, our giveaway supply may dwindle, but you may still find the form you need in the IRS binder labelled Reproducible Federal Tax Forms for Use in Libraries. Since not all forms are supplied by the IRS, we would like you to realize that the library subscribes to a more exhaustive loose leaf service entitled Tax Action Coordinator: Forms and Agreements, published by the Research Institute of America, Inc. These volumes are shelved with the other non-circulating tax materials at the end of book stack number nine. Ref KF 6366 R4. Vols. 2-FOR LONG RANGE FINANCIAL PLANNING:

The library steadily adds to its stock of books on personal finance. After the soul searching time of tax for completion, you may wish to see that one of two of the following recent library arrivals "crosses your palm."

Fight the IRS and Win: A Self-Defense Guide for Taxpayers by Cliff Robertson. KF 6324 .Z9 R63 1988. The author is a practicing attorney and university professor. As the subtitle suggests, Robertson's efforts are clearly directed toward the honest taxpayer, not the evader or protestor.

Directory of Companies Offering Dividend Reinvestment Plans by Sumie Kinoshita. 5th edition copyrighted 1988 is on order. Library also has earlier edition catalogued as HG 4028 .D5 D472. This book describes over 1,000 companies offering dividend reinvestment plans, the popular way to add to stock ownership while avoiding brokerage fees.

Nasdaq Handbook: the Stock Market of Tomorrow - Today. HG4551 .N37 1987. Serious investors will want to study this first comprehensive guide to the over-the-counter securities market. It is filled with facts and analyses prepared by academicians and practitioners.

Career Savvy-Computer Information Systems' Concerns

by Melissa Barnes

Q. I've heard that the job market for CIS majors is drying up. Is this true?

A. No. The CIS field changes very rapidly, so the need for some functions tends to be phased out as the need for other functions expands. Currently, for instance, graduates of two-year programming courses are having trouble finding jobs. There's a good market, however, for CIS professionals who have a good understanding of business, so Bryant students, with the combination of business and CIS training, are doing well.

Some leaders in the field predict that the need for COBOL business programmers will drop in the coming years. Expected causes are a shift of activity to the end user, as well as increased use of software purchased outside the company and possibly outside the country. Japanese competition for software development is seen as a strong potential threat.

On the other hand, shortages are already developing in certain specialized functions within the CIS field. These include database analysts/administrators, telecommunications specialists, systems programmers and people with a knowledge of networking. Another function that is projected to grow is that of the CIS consultant.

In summary, the trend in the field seems to be toward a requirement for more skills and preparation. This includes both increased technical expertise and a thorough understanding of business. And since the field changes so rapidly, flexibility and continued upgrading of skills will continue to be important.

Q. Where do CIS majors make the most money?

A. In terms of industries, CIS majors seem to do best where computers are seen as an integral part of the process. These include utilities, banking, financial services and insurance as well as the data processing industry. Salaries tend to be somewhat lower in industries such as manufacturing, retail/wholesale, and education.

From a geographical perspective, California pays the highest average salaries, followed by New York City, Baltimore/Washington, Boston, and Chicago. However, in a recent survey, the highest satisfaction with pay and benefits was found in Denver, one of the lower paying localities.

CAREERS IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

Careers in International Business, a panel presentation by professionals in the field, will be held Tuesday, February 21 at 6:00 p.m. in the North Dining Room. All students are welcome to attend.

The professionals will talk about their work and give tips on how to enter the international sphere.

Ira Magaziner, keynote speaker, is President of Telesis, an International Management Consulting firm. He is co-author of the book, Minding America's Business and is sought by national governments, including Sweden and Israel, as well as multi-national corporations.

Magaziner will be followed by three speakers who will each briefly address careers in their particular sphere.

A.J. McNamara, Bryant alumni and president/owner of John Alden Associates, will address Careers in International Marketing. Stacey Jones, Assistant Vice-President for Fleet Financial Group, will cover Careers in International Banking, and Michael Black, Treasurer of Moran Shipping Agencies and Director of the Providence World Trade Club, will discuss Careers in International Shipping.

11th ANNUAL SPORTS CELEBRITY CARNIVAL TO BENEFIT RHODE ISLAND SPECIAL OLYMPICS

The Sports Celebrity Carnival, one of the more memorable evenings for Rhode Island sports fans last year, returns to the Providence Civic Center on Monday night, February 20 from 5:00 to 10:00 PM for the eleventh year. This event gives sports enthusiasts the opportunity to mingle and chat with professional athletes, and join in games of chance and skill.

An impressive group of sports personalities, featuring Miller Lite Celebrity Ben Davidson, (former Oakland Raider great defensive end), along with Mosi Tatupu, Ron Wooten, and several other members of the Patriots will be on hand for the carnival, along with local TV, radio and sports figures.

This fun-filled family affair will have many new carnival type games this year, and, of course, the proceeds will be used by Rhode Island Special Olympics to serve over 1,000 adults and children with mental retardation through our year-round sports training and athletic competition programs.

Come on down to the Civic Center on Monday, February 20 and enjoy a great evening for a very special cause. Tickets are $5.00 for adults, $2.50 for children and may be obtained in advance by calling Rhode Island Special Olympics at (401) 463-5560.

GREEK NEWS

Let the pledging begin! Friday in the Rotunda was a great start to pledging - the entertainment provided by TKE and TE was pretty good too!! The pledges of Alpha Phi would like to wish all pledges the best of luck. Only a few more weeks left - hang in there!

Rena - sorry for not erasing the board! Please don't yell at me! Michelle - what's a moose trap?? How many people would stand in freezing cold weather, trying to chip the ice of a car for an hour? I'd say at least three!!

This week, Alpha Phi pledges will be selling lollipops to be delivered on Valentine's Day - "Buy you sweetheart a Phi Heart."

They are only $.50 each and the proceeds go to Eileen Stevens' C.H.U.C.K. program. So buy a lollipop from any pledge if you haven't already.

Pledge quote of the week:

I will not follow
Where the path might lead;
But I will go
Where there is no path,
And I will leave a trail.
- O.P.

AΦK

Let's go surfin' now. . . Well, once again we are in the heart of pledging. This year it started off with a bang, as Moe "met up" with a TE pledge. Let's hope the next three weeks are a little less exciting than that! The sisters would like to wish good luck to KT's social pledge dot, Baby Face. It took guts to go it alone, good job!

We had an overflowing sea of alumni grace our presence this weekend. It was, as usual, more than great seeing all of them. They all seemed to have a good time, especially Beaner, who just didn't want to leave (or was it that she couldn't?)

Hey Frass, G-Ski wants to know if you went out Friday night.

Once again, a friendly reminder: The Bowl-A-Thon for Muscular Dystrophy is Monday. We really appreciate any and all support. Any questions, please see Christine Trettel. Thanks.

Hey Mr. Calayo, how's it going? Hope that put you in a good mood....better luck in the future.

Well, our brothers' party last week was a good time everyone in attendance got pretty psyched up and ready for the weekend. A few wrestling matches, but no major rumbles to report. I'd like to thank P-Man for keeping my fridge stocked. May you never stop.

Many alumni came up to visit last weekend. I'm sure that they all had a great time. Scary set himself up for the duration in Iggy's bed. I hope he enjoyed it because he didn't, for some unexplained reason. Vic's gonna get laced if he hasn't already. (Just thought I'd put that in).

In sports: You'll still have to wait. We have a few games this week, but you'll have to wait til next week to hear the news of their outcome. I know everyone was dying to hear about it but those are the breaks.

No cheek or dog this week officially. Patch and Telly could make check every week just for being them though. Have a nice day and congratulate us on finally getting a new VCR, it only took us a semester but it is here.

ΔEX

The brothers finally got to open up their Christmas presents but found that they were all defective. Pledging is going great as the brothers enjoyed the extravaganza all weekend. We wish our pledges good luck in the next 4 weeks, that's right, not 3 weeks boys. The rumor is the new sorority on campus was pledged very hard Saturday at the Lincoln mall. Don't forget to get us something next weekend. We would like to extend good luck to the rest of the greek organizations over the next 3 weeks.

Along with the brothers enjoying a fun-filled weekend with the pledges, so did some of our super alumni. Making guest appearances were Pops, Ball, Randy, Dirt, and Buck. Since nothing was happening downstairs, we also entertained Phi Sigs alumni for not making the most of his four years at Bryant with the bad boys upstairs. If you were really serious, we could always use a veteran pledge.

In other news, the Delta A team finished preseason with a blowout win over a scrub B team. The question that baffles us is how we will compete against perennial power house and biggest rival TE. One thing is for sure, though, Farmer will not leave the game uninjured. In other sports, we beat a swell bunch of guys sharing a common interest 7-6.

KAP

Well our pledge class is set - Smooth, Sisk, Sueff, Healey, Scott, Danny, Dana, Date, Mike, Shawn, Rickert, Matt. Keep it up guys, brotherhood may be yours, be 1!!!!

Hey dudes! Yaaaah dudes!! We hope that everybody has enjoyed the first week. The best is yet to come. Tomorrow starts off alumnuts weekend. Fun WILL be had by all. A couple have already made an appearance.....Ahnsy...Psycho...Droid.

Thursday's Brothers Party went very well. Made possible by Boz. (Treasurers note....If you owe, please pay!) Breeze showed his idiocy with the tile cement. Goob's suite was the overall winner. I knew they had a rug.

Friday was a fun one. Schwartz....Oh my! Hey Pants, how many do we have more? Sueff! Correct him!

The invasion of the skinheads is back. Smooth, Boz, and pants. What was that long blue thing in the Jeep? Also, there is an anvilhead running with two little anvilhead followers. They were last seen playing ring-around the anvil tree.

Grillo.

Grillo and Billy.

A grand welcome back to Richie. It is nice to see that he has lost a few pounds and now has two

He sparky, wouldn't it be easier to use soap and water on your laundry?

Word just in....another skinhead is pledge class president.

KDR would like to thank Bill Phillips for his help in making Eileen Stevens' presentation successful. - Thanks Bill.

Rock would like to add that this will be the best month of our lives. Yaaaah dude!

Quote of the Week was given by Jim Schwartz on Friday after Kirby's, "I oofle to goopifs ispoolse."

KT

Hello and welcome back to school. Last week's edition was never saved so here it is. We hope that everyone had an eventful and restful Christmas break. Friday opened up the semester with our traditional H.H. with the muck-a-mucks-our sisters of APK. Bugghead was unfortunately unable to attend due to the fact he was recovering from a hang-over, or so he says. We all know he didn't to show his ugly face in public. All I can say is that Bugg really knows how to treat a girl by leaving her some fudge. Good thing Meg the Keg didn't find out, or did she.

Saturday was a beautiful day to stay indoors as did Doug, Stevie, Andy and Phil. Some people just can't keep their smoke in. As night fell, so did Jeff's morals and fashion. After offering himself to all the ladies at his party, he was given a surprise visit from a name we'd rather not mention. He says he was set up. I feel sorry for his roommates if he was. Freeman a.k.a. "hands" was literally on hand to introduce himself to all present as well as almost going the whole weekend without breaking something. This past weekend Freeman had a tough time staying on his feet.

In KT sports there was a major upset when our hoopsters lost to a bunch of unknowns; however, are currently trying to strike a deal that would send Andrew "I can't get hatched either" Blum and two undisclosed draft choices from APK's farm team in order to acquire Ben to play center. Rock just hasn't been able to fill the hole. Even without such a trade I believe with Grubber's gun, Mike's acrobatics, Rich's dribbling, Craig's rebounding, and Chris and Bugg as our cheerleaders we could be in contention for the title. In some more upbeat news KT's hockey team has a record of 3-2 after an impressive forfeit victory over a very strong Beta team. Great team work to get down to the gym in time to secure the win provided the margin of victory.

In closing we would like to wish the pledges luck and the brothers/sisters patience during the next few weeks of pledging.

The Brothers of Phi Epsilon Pi are very proud to introduce out 1989 pledges, Jay Conte, Dave Rapoza, Mark Alvarez, Scott Meizen, Mike Epstein, Dave Cheney, Brian Paquette, Marlin Hershey, Tim Panico, and David Eller. This year's pledge captain is Tim and the assistant is Mike. The pledges were very pleased to see many alumni up this past weekend and are looking forward for them to return soon. Pledges stay strong and stay together and some day you will become brothers, also the best of luck to all the other 1989 pledges. Jim and Frank, superb job so far, keep it up.

P.S. The weather outside is frightful.....

Hello everyone! Well, pledging's finally started and so far our little pledges are doing fine -- still a long way to go however. Before pledging officially started, the sisters celebrated our first Sister's party of the semester on Thursday nite. It was a BLAST!! The Casualties finally christened their mugs -- a moment they had long waited for and that will not soon be forgotten. All remained standing, amazingly enough, and resumed partying to the wee hours of the morning! Casper did a disappearing act but miraculously appeared later on the following day.

Pledging got off to a good start at Kirby's on Friday afternoon before the festivities began. Then it was off to the rotunda to greet our 19 pledges. Despite some slightly inflamed tempers, everything went relatively smoothly. It was great seeing our alumni (KJ, Kim Gorr, Lori Gardino, Lisa Genaske, Laurie Flinn, & Lisa Letendre) who came up for the weekend. And speaking of Alumni, Kristen .. is there anything you can do about that re-occurring nightmare?

On an ending note, the sisters just want to wish the rest of the pledges the best of luck and hang in there it's well worth it!

TKE

Knock. Knock. Knock. Who is it? Pledges. Yes, ladies and gentlemen, pledging is upon us. A prepledging party pitted Brett against Slabber in arm wrestling and Fatman and Jit vs. Alex, Tom, and Mike in ice trays.

A midweek gathering in the third suite left Janice with a bump on the head and some profound quotes: "It's such a sad, sad, story when a little match dies." Kirby's started things off on Friday, and continued into the rotunda. Many TKE's came back for alumni weekend, except for Willy Wirehead and Dieter, who we may never see again.

In sports, the hockey team lost to the Cottonballers amidst a storm of protest, the Snowmen are 1-0, and TKE-A hoops got underway against Phi-Ep on Monday.

As you can see, there's really not a lot I can say, so I'll just conclude by saying good luck and hang tough to Andrew, Mike, Don, Brett, Ray, Tom, and Alex, and to all other pledges of '89. And good luck to Jitbag, too.

Varsity Football Could Become a Reality at Bryant

Well for those of you who may have thought about the idea of football coming to Bryant, the idea is still alive! The purpose of this article is to inform you of what we are planning and what is coming up. Today (Feb. 9) there will be survey tables set up in front of both dining halls. The purpose of this survey is to accomplish the first step in making football at Bryant a reality! This will allow us to find out what you, the students, think of the idea. As was stated in the last article in the Archway, in order for this to work we need the support of the students, faculty, and the administration. This survey will determine whether or not we have the support of the students, which is needed to gain the support of the latter two.

We would like to use this opportunity to inform you of what has been done to date. Just before break, a letter went out in the Alumni Newsletter, with the intention of getting some feedback from the alumni. We have also met with the Dean of Admissions, the Athletic Director and the Vice-President of Student Affairs, to name a few. Basically they all gave us the same answer, before anything could be done we have to know the students are behind this. So please, take a minute out of your day to fill out the survey and let us know what you think! If you have any questions or suggestions please feel free to call or drop a note in the box of myself or Kristin Hatch.

Thank you,

Rob Covino

Athlete of the Week

Laura Scinto
(Sr. G Shelton, CT)

Laura reached the 1000 pt in her career when she scored a personal best 30 points vs. Assumption. During the past week she averaged 17 pts per game as the Lady Indians defeated Springfield, Assumption, and AIC.

Richard Rose (#31) presses for two vs. A.I.C.
