

Rhetor

DENNIS SALEH

“Words fail me.” Why read further then?
Well, because you see the words do continue, failures or not. It is not easy being a word.
Or, even using them. Let alone, using them well.
You see, to the contrary, often it is the reader who fails words. Words may do very well by themselves, with no reader, even. Left alone, to themselves, words might do anything — everything. Certainly, they always have.
There is no human thing that did not exist first in words. They are the apparati to any and all enterprise. Try thinking-- even imagining--a thing, without words, and see how far you get. But never mind that.
It is never words that desert people—only people that fail words. Next sentence.