President Barbour of Brown University Welcomes Bryant to New Home

Congratulations President Jacobs on His Achievement

Bryant College was honored by the presence of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour at its Dedication Exercises. No man has contributed greater enlistment to the cultural life of the community and state than has this noted scholar and educator.

His tribute to Bryant follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen and Friends of the College:

I count myself particularly happy to be able to be here tonight and to share with you in this extraordinary occasion.

In the prayer of Dr. Barcroft at the opening of the school year, he referred to the matter of vision. New someone has dreamed this group of buildings. They looked very little as they were built during the years that we remember this site. Someone has dreamed this college a century and a half ago, and to Jacobs, in the very years from each one of the buildings to the other, I have marveled at what has been accomplished by those who have constructed these buildings and have transformed them into so perfect an epitome for a school such as this, is nothing less than a work of genius, but someone has dreamed not only this group of buildings as they stand here tonight; someone has dreamed the whole structure—the whole educational structure of this college.

Debt to Dreamers

How much we owe to people who dream—who see things that are unseen by others. An ideal is a vision of something before it has ever been seen in dreams, and my heart is filled with congratulations tonight to President Jacobs and to those—for he has better and better have worked with him—who have held up his hands while he has gone on with this extraordinary work. And if I bring to the fulfillment and congratulations of the University of which I am the Head. I trust and I believe that out of those structures there will go a multitude of young men who will make the United States a better country in which to live—will make our city even a finer city than it is today, and who will have something to do with the transformation of a world into a place better adapted even now to the best life of the people.

Last night I was in New York at the Cornish Theatre, to see the opening of the birth of Andrew Carnegie. One hundred years ago that little Scotchman first saw the light of day, and in the extremely free address given by the

HUNDREDS INSPECT NEW BUILDINGS AND CAMPUS Alumni and Students Act as Usurers

South Hall, Alumni Hall, the Placement Bureau, and Library were open for inspection, with guides of the Dedication Exercises which were held in the Stratton Gymnasium Auditorium.

Administrative Officers and members of the faculty were on hand to answer inquiries of visitors who were taken on a tour of inspection by members of the Phi Beta Kappa and the Young Orchard Alumni Association.

From seven to eight-thirty the halls were crowded with visitors, who were shown the modern facilities, praising the new style of equipment. What a wonderful multiplicity of equipment! And all to meet the needs of different generations. We can, if we want, look back to Bryant's seventeenth years of service to this community, but to me, personally, and I think probably to you, our thoughts tonight go not to the past, even though it be a fine past and a splendid record of service, but to the future with the hope that even greater service will be rendered to this community by this College. That been, perhaps its last home, it may live indefinitely, perhaps its last home, it may live indefinitely, and I hope to think of Bryant College as a body of water entirely surrounded by educational institutions, as well. And to the future, to the world of tomorrow, to all the institutions that is going to continue to lend service among such a galaxy of worth-while men and women of this nation and city and of New England and the United States, I wish that ever greater service will be rendered to this community by this College. That been, perhaps its last home, it may live indefinitely, and I hope to think of Bryant College as a body of water entirely surrounded by educational institutions, as well.

Dedication Issue

IMPRESSIVE FORMAL CEREMONIES MARK DEDICATION OF NEW BUILDINGS OF BRYANT COLLEGE

Governor Green of Rhode Island and Dr. Barbour, President of Brown University, Among Speakers

Wednesday evening, November 23, 1935, marked the Formal Dedication of the new buildings and campus of Bryant College, at Hope and Benevolent St., and Young Orchard Avenue. The programme of exercises in the Stratton Gymnasium Auditorium included the Invocation by Dr. Arthur H. Bradford, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Providence, and a greeting by President Jacobs of Bryant College, who introduced the speakers of the evening.

Admissions were handled by Mr. Excellency, Honorable Theodore Francis Green, Governor of Rhode Island, Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, President of Brown University, Mr. George W. Gardiner, Mr. William L. Sweet, and Mr. Everett E. Salisbury, the last three of whom are among Bryant's Honorary Alumni.

Songs by Mlle. Lucia Chagnon, formerly of the Chicago Opera Company, and instrument music by the Place String Trio contributed to the enjoyment of the occasion.

The first address of the evening was delivered by Governor Theodore Francis Green. The text of the Governor's address follows:

Mr. President, Members and Friends of Bryant College:

Like you, I have been taken on a tour of inspection and as I went through those various buildings and saw all of them modern and beautiful offices, I was lifted up with joy. But it struck me in spite of its excellence, I could not help running over in my mind the various changes which have occurred right here. The College has become a near neighbor of mine now, and all my life I have been accustomed to go back and forth by this site.

And now, at last, it has become the home of Bryant College, and it has all been done over. Some of the old buildings were torn down, but throughout all these changes, to state who is familiar with it, these walls can still be traced in the eye of memory. Now it seems to me that these changes—these valued changes of Bryant College and other educational institutions, social clubs, business organizations, and political institutions as well—must be made over from time to time to suit the needs of different generations. We can, if we want, look back to Bryant's seventeenth years of service to this community, but to me, personally, and I think probably to you, our thoughts tonight go not to the past, even though it be a fine past and a splendid record of service, but to the future with the hope that even greater service will be rendered to this community by this College. Providence Delightful City in Which to Study

The city of Providence, in addition to being a center for woolen and cotton goods, is a large manufacturing jewelry point and famed throughout the world in the manufacture of silverware, fine precision machines and small tools. It is also a great retail shopping center. Students at Bryant College are thereby afforded enviable opportunities for field work and first hand observation in many branches of business and, incidentally, for placement upon the completion of their studies.

Educational Center

Bryant, founded in 1856, is a university city with the prestige and intellectual advantages that naturally pertain to an educational community; it is a city of homes with pleasant social life and friendly intercourse. The student's life in Providence is a happy and safe one. With delightful parks and ample recreational facilities, this is the center of a thriving industrial community with unusual diversity of manufacture and types of business.
The opening of Stratton Gymnasium with its many opportunities for activities has given impetus to the plans of the various clubs and organizations at Bryant College. The officers of the Collegian, Bryant's newspaper, started the annual editorials with an informal tea dance given in Alumni Hall. The achievement which you are recognizing today in these ceremonies is significant of the changes which are taking place in the nation today. In our rapidly changing economic and social conditions it is essential that we provide new methods and new procedures, based upon the lessons of past experience, to meet these new situations. So it is in the educational life of the nation. We must utilize the educational life of the nation. We must utilize progressive educational methods based upon proved methods and policies to meet the present-day needs in educating our youth for patriotic public leadership.

With these wonderful new facilities added to the sound background of seventy-two years of constructive and worthwhile educational progress, Bryant College stands ready to move forward with renewed assurance for greater achievement than ever before. I wish you success in the continued good work of this splendid institution.

Head of the class of 1907, Mr. Andrews, we were told that through the life of Andrew Carnegie the motivating principle on which he worked was to put into practice a principle, as to which he accomplished, was the principle of the maximum use of human means, and to a wonderful degree that dream of his came true; until all around the circle of the globe civilizations of the modern world of which Andrew Carnegie have been held, and many of them are being held tonight. The old principle which is to the core of the whole school, there shall be an ever-increasing stream of inspiration to others.

Uncertain Times

We are living in a strange and troubled time. No man knows what is going to be tomorrow. It is going to be in the last year or the next decade. We know, after all, that people need change in their lives. The old faith which was the motive of a sufficient number of the American people, we shall not need to dread what may come. Let us see what is the motive and face it accordingly.

I greatly enjoy the poem of Oliver Wendell

Holmes. It was written in connection with the fifth anniversary of his graduation from Harvard College. That used to be a strange time to me. I wondered whether there was such a thing as a fifth anniversary of graduation from college. I don’t know anymore, I will soon be experiencing that myself. But at the time it was the memory of the class of the year for which I had to prepare for the rest of my society. And it was this day that the motive of a sufficient number of the American people, we shall not need to dread what may come. It seems like it will face that motive and face it accordingly.
