The Booster

Not boasting with a braggart's song
But boasting to help along.

Commencement Number
June 1928
The close of the fifth year is the huge door to be thrown open, to let the graduates and academic excellence escape into the world.

The Booster takes pride in the accomplishments of these graduates and wishes nothing but success for them on their trip into the world.

The close of the Booster is to take advantage of these graduates' success and the favorable conditions of the school in the United States to publish several issues.

That the above statements have been accurately received that all are sufficient and better is most unlawful.

The Booster has the same principle of publications, is a body of people whose functions are sufficient expected of each. However, to exist, the editor has a careful study of the formal organization meeting.

Volume V of "The Booster" Terminates

The close of Bryant-Stratton's sixty-fifth year is near at hand. Once more the huge doors of the business world are to be thrown open to welcome into its fold another group of future business executives and administrators. The Booster takes this occasion to congratulate these young men and women graduates for the work they have accomplished, and bids them "bon voyage" on their trip to further achievement and success.

The close of the year also marks the termination of Volume V of "The Booster." It was especially gratifying during the year to receive letters of favorable comment from many other school publications throughout the United States. The way in which the several issues were received by the students was also encouraging. "The Booster," of course, was not devoid of mistakes, but it was so favorably received that the editor is happy to conclude that all effort to publish a bigger and better "Booster" was fruitful.

The close of the year also marks the termination of Volume V of "The Booster." It was especially gratifying during the year to receive letters of favorable comment from many other school publications throughout the United States. The way in which the several issues were received by the students was also encouraging. "The Booster," of course, was not devoid of mistakes, but it was so favorably received that the editor is happy to conclude that all effort to publish a bigger and better "Booster" was fruitful.

That the above is true is evident, but the same result or even better might have been accomplished with 90% more ease had not one apparent weakness prevailed. The editor especially desires to bring to the mind of his successor and the members of his staff the following facts which may prove of vital importance is remedying a situation upon which the success of "The Booster" is most wholly dependent.

"The Booster" staff, built on the same principles as those of other publications, is composed of a group of people whose duties it is to perform the functions required of them in the positions they are filling. The titles usually are sufficient to indicate what is expected of each member of the staff. However, to be sure that no ambiguity exists, the editor-in-chief usually makes a careful study of the staff before its formal organization and at the initial meeting explains in detail the individual duties of each member. It is then the duty of each member of the staff to devote his spare time, no matter how limited it may be, to the work required of him for the publication. In any publication, each member must take an active interest in the position he is filling if the publication is to be a success. The first sign of loyalty is a 100% attendance at meetings when they are called, unless some member has an excusable reason. A small attendance indicates laxness and is absolutely discouraging to those who attend. The result is that by the end of the fiscal year, although a large list of names appears on the first page, the publication in all reality represents the efforts of two or three members at the most. The depositing of the comparatively light loads of the negligent members on the shoulders of those few interested members, who already were overtaxed with work in the pursuance of their own duties, makes the load vulnerable, and the result, eventually, would be disastrous. "The Booster" could run with much ease literally and financially without bordering one particular individual if each member of the staff but remembered that he or she was given that position with certain duties to perform, and that upon the performance of those duties in conjunction with those of the other members depends the entire success of "The Booster."

"The position of Editor-in-chief is an enviable one as it is every other position on the Board of Editors. The practical experience one may obtain from any one of the positions is unlimited. It is time well spent, and for a worthy cause. The editor wishes to thank all of those who in any way co-operated with him during the past year in furthering the interests of "The Booster" or in any other school function which he may have undertaken. The editor also wishes to extend to his successor his most sincere wishes for a most successful "Booster" during the coming year.

Editor-in-chief.

Commencement Day
Draws Near

August 17 is Red Letter Day in College Calendar

Friday morning, August 17, graduates from all departments of Bryant-Stratton College will assemble at the Albee Theatre to take part in an interesting program of speeches by prominent men, music by the Albee Theatre Orchestra and the awarding of degrees and diplomas to successful candidates. Following the Commencement exercises the College will be open throughout the day for the reception of parents and friends who may care to visit Bryant-Stratton College, corner Fountain and Union Streets, Providence. Over two thousand persons witnessed the awarding of degrees and diplomas to 243 young men and young women at the commencement exercises held at the Albee Theatre last year, when Mr. Nicholas Roosevelt, associate editor of the New York Times, was the commencement orator.

This year, plans are progressing to make the commencement program in every way one befitting the occasion when over two hundred young men and young women will receive their degrees and diplomas.

See pages four and five of this issue for more information of plans for Commencement.
Prophecy of the Class of June, 1928

By Beatrice Robinson

In the year 4,000, while excavating among the ruins of the city of Providence, a most interesting manuscript was brought to light. After some difficulties it was translated and here we have the reproduction of the original scroll:

Many, many years have passed Since we left our Alma Mater Dear; And many are the changes wrought Throughout each passing year.

Now once again we gather round, Our friendship to renew, And every change that time has made, Will be brought forth to view.

J. Campbell and A. Carlson. J. Campbell and A. Carlson are lawyers far renowned, And marks of their great eloquence may everywhere be found.

M. O'Connor and M. Mullaney. Marie O'Connor is teaching school I hear, And when M. Mullaney gives a speech, People come from far and near.

Mary Conlon. Our dear old pal, Mary Conlan, is a nurse, and all do tell. That many of her patients really don't care to get well.

Mary Kelley, M. O'Brien and E. Ramsey. Mary Kelley is principal of a fine big school, Where M. O'Brien teaches and all obey her rule. In this most glorious duty she is aided by Miss E. Ramsey; a good old shoat of ours.

Mary Fanning. While sitting in a tea room waiting for someone, The owner, Miss Fanning, came and spoke to me.

L. Hayes and Doris Webster. Lucy runs a dancing school where modern steps are learned, While Doris Webster, a musician, Candidly fame has earned.

W. Spettigue. Winnie as an agent to Paris oft' will go And staidly new creations to wear on Fashion Row.

H. Hennessey and J. Oates. Helen has married a doctor of the heart, While Jimmie, an accountant, was successful from the start.

K. Buckley. You could never guess what Kit Buckley turned out to be, She married an undertaker, the one for you and me.

L. Martin. Lilian knows her onions and also knows her cats, She gyps all B-S students when she sells them real rock coats.

G. Forrest. Gay, the Russian dancer, is famous in New York shows, She twists and twirls and shakes her curls and dances on her toes.

Eva Carlson. Behind a large brown desk, Eva sits and toils, She sings and moans and we hear the tears, "Lord help us 'Working Gals.'"

M. Gahan. Jr. Gahan runs a "hot dog" stand, She thinks it's quite a lark, But every time we pass her shop we can hear the weensies bark.

L. Kitchen. Oh dear, oh dear, what shall I do? This baker, Laura cries, I have no raisins for these buns and I can't catch any flies.

D. Garbutt and G. Johnson. Dot Garbett is secretary to a senator's son, And is helped in her grave duties by Miss G. Johnson.

B. Friesencher. Blanche finds her daily joy curling ladies' hair, And lifting wrinkled faces to make them smooth and fair.

J. Ferreria. In a studio on Broadway Julia shows the latest dance, It's called the "Jumping Willey;" it just came here from France.

S. Fogel. When in New York we will expect to hear our Sadie sing, But no doubt her voice will give out when she gets that wedding ring.

Cecilia Kaminsky. "Ladies, Celia bolesers, 'I'm ready now to demonstrate to you How you will always have nice hair by using my shampoo."

C. Lamb. A journalist is Celia, she always gets the news, She's run around from north to south till now she needs new shoes.

E. Vere. Ethel deals in roller skates and her business never is slack, She sells her goods to all those girls whom she huds walking back.

E. Sutherland. Evvyia was popular until caught in a raid, She worked in Floto's circus selling watered lemonade.

D. Stone. For Dot Stone you must look when you are cross the sea. She's walking 'round from house to house selling home-made tea.

S. Sayles. Silva runs a gown shop, I think on Roosevelt Street, Unless you have a "Silvia's" gown, your wardrobe's incomplete.

E. Sherman. Now you can't forget our Betty, she has iron in her hands, She pulls, and turns your head about waving hair by strand by strand.

H. Hartley. Standing in a corner in some department store, Edith smiles and sometimes frowns, if customers number a score.

R. Proctor. If we bought the Saturday Evening Post or some other magazine, Rath's picture is sure to see advertisement Dandineer.

R. Spaulding. If you could have seen R. Spaulding, there would have been some hoots, For she and her little hubby reminded you of Casper and Toots.

I. Dupre. Ah, you all remember Ida, here's a shock, She stops all family rows with her gentle soothing sock.

D. Corliss. "Number, please," cries Miss "D," as she sits in the exchange station, But sometimes she gets very blue and thinks of her vacation.

D. Iannuccillo and F. Demeio. In the Metropolitan Opera Company Dolores takes a part, While Frances as an actress will capture every heart.

L. Duffy. An interesting audience has Lavina to those who'd like to know, She plays sweet music day by day in Barnum's three-ring show.

C. Einstein. "C" is very busy selling real estate, If you buy your chicken coop from her you'll be making no mistake.

G. Shea. With diamonds, jewels and floating yachts, G. is a millionaire, And looks down on college students with a "snappy air."

A. Knowlton. In an office around the corner Ann Knowlton you will see, She's now adopted the motto we know as "Oh dear me."

Helen Lang and Marjorie Mayhew. There are some of our loved classmates, Helen L. and Margie M. Though they are last they're not least, as you will plainly see, For both of them are starring in a play called "Days of Old." The like of which, for talent great, has never been seen we're told. Thus Time's relentless hand has changed our friends and ways of life, and each of us has tasted both of pleasures and of scurril; yet we all have memories fond, and we will willingly confess That we have spent many happy days in dear old B. & S.
Seniors Hear Address by Sidney Clifford

Banquet at Turks Head Club

At the Turks Head Club on Wednesday evening, May 2, 50 seniors of the business administration department of the Bryant-Stratton College were honored at a get-together dinner, which has become an unusual custom for the graduating class.

Mr. Sidney Clifford, former State Senator of Rhode Island, and a graduate of Bryant-Stratton College, has an interesting talk on the development of business through the centuries, and the need of the right kind of ability in meeting present-day business demands. He was introduced by President Harry Loeb Jacobs. Other members of the faculty who gave brief talks were Mr. Jeremiah C. Barker and Mr. Henry J. Lee, instructors.

The committee in charge comprised James J. McLoughlin, chairman; Gilbert S. Cranston, George E. Castello, Jr., George Flanagan, George Craig and Romeo Duhamel.

Weekly Dances a New Feature

Assembly Hall Thronged on Opening Day

An addition to the social activities of Bryant-Stratton College was recently instituted in the form of dancing on every Thursday afternoon from three to live o'clock. These dances are held in the new Bryant-Stratton Hall, which is rapidly showing its utility in student activities.

The number of students who attended the opening dance was a sure indication that these weekly afternoon dances had been eagerly awaited by the student body in general. Their response was very encouraging. All had a merry time. Yes, even the so-called "wall-flowers" treed the floor occasionally, of course, cautiously.

The music was splendid, and much credit is due the student players. Harald Hinckley, pianist; Thomas Byrnes, saxophonist; and Arthur Lewis, violinist, who have so generously agreed to furnish music for us each week.

If expectations are realized, these dances are destined to prove of valuable aid in stimulating better acquaintance, pride and decent entertainment under proper supervision, and, in general, of tremendous value toward the social welfare of all the students.

Bryant-Stratton Opens Baseball Season

Team Has Many Newcomers to Help Veterans

Bryant-Stratton was again represented in baseball this year. Although several regulars of last year's team have graduated, there were sufficient number of new comers, combined with the remaining veterans, to give the college another strong combination. There were Richard Taylor, last year's star summation College at Worcester, Mass.; of East Providence High and an all-intercollegiate League choice. Several fine hurlers with experience have been working out with Norman Feinberg; McPartland, a pitcher with Mt. St. Mary School of Baltimore and later with Loyola University, and Phillips, a pitcher for the past four years on the Plainfield High School nine. The outfield was strong with Andrew Bourbon and McLaughlin, regulars of last year available again.

The following schedule was arranged by Manager Marscio: April 12, Hope; 18, Dean Academy at Franklin, Mass.; 21, Pomfret Academy at Pomfret, Conn.; May 1, New England Institute at Worcester, Mass.; 5, Bulkeley High at New London; 9, Mount St. Charles Academy at Woonsocket; 10, United States Naval Training Station at Newport; 14, Cranston; 16, Plainfield at Mousup, Conn.; 18, Rogers at Newport; 22, Bulkeley; 25, South Kingstown High at Wakefield; 28, St. Mary's at Taunton; June 1, South Kingstown; 6, Asylum College at Worcester, Mass.; 8, St. Mary's; 12, Post's Business Institute at Worcester, Mass.

Headed in the Classroom

Mary Coddas: Mr. Handy told me to report on the hardwood business.

Mary Mullaney: Oh, well, he knows you'll use your head.

Business Administration Classes Hold Annual Outing

Meet at Cold Spring House, Wickford

One of the events always anticipated with much enthusiasm by the boys of the Business Administration Department, is the outing held each year on the shores of Narragansett Bay. This year, the classes journeyed to the Cold Spring House, Wickford, on June 26. Leaving the college by automobiles early in the morning they enjoyed a pleasant trip down and arrived with hearty appetites in readiness for the good luncheon prepared for them. Later in the day, they engaged in swimming, canoeing, ball playing and numerous sports as they saw fit.

The committee of arrangements comprised: George Flanagan, chairman; Alvin Keen, Donald Walsh of the Senior Class and George Craig, Arnold LaLonde, Charles Phelan and Romeo Dumbel of the Junior Class.

Misses Mulvaney and Bir Save Girl. Miss Bir is a B-S Graduate

Miss Frances McNally, 20 years of age, whose home is in Brooklyn, N. Y., but who is summering at Pine Crest, near Riverside, had a narrow escape from drowning in Bullocks' Cove recently.

Miss Doris Mulvaney of Pine Crest, who is a good swimmer, was bathing near by, and hurried to the assistance of the McNally girl. Being unable to make headway against the strong tide, she was obliged to call for assistance and Miss Irene Bir, also of Pine Crest, who was near the shore in street attire, rushed into the water fully clothed and the two rescuers succeeded in getting the now helpless McNally girl ashore.

Bowling League Banquet

Bowling Season Terminates with Elaborate Festivities

The Bowling League of Bryant-Stratton College brought a most successful bowling season to a close with an elaborate banquet held at the Rathskellar Restaurant.

After an excellent turkey dinner, the formal exercises were opened by Mr. Thomas Moran, president of the Bowling League, who spoke on the progress of the bowling team. Mr. Moran presided at the exercises and presented the following members of the faculty who favored them with very interesting talks full of humorous anecdotes of class incidents: the Messrs. Nelson Galski, Harold Adams, Jeremiah Barber, Henry Lee and Mr. Hector Gilman.

Following the after-dinner speeches, cigars were distributed and a very pleasing entertainment given by a celebrated troupe of cabaret artists. These responded to many encores.

The boys certainly had a wonderful time, and owe much of it to the committee of arrangements, the Messrs. Anthony Kalosnian, Everett Canning, Solomon Golden, Joseph Bartone, and Walter Djalke.
