You and Bryant – A “symbiotic relationship”

Throughout your life, many things change: marital status, parent/grandparenthood, jobs, career paths, home cities, states, and even countries in some cases. Your relationship with Bryant, however, endures.

Bryant is where you learned to write a business and marketing plan. It’s where you learned to work as part of a team and where you honed your presentation skills. You bonded with a professor or two. You even came to be grateful to a challenging professor who ended up teaching you the most valuable skill in your professional toolbox – years after graduating, of course. You met the people you have been – or will be – friends with for 5, 10, or 20+ years from now.

In turn, you added to Bryant’s prestige every time you moved up a rung of the ladder of your career and told people you graduated from Bryant. When you attended a networking event sponsored by Bryant and were able to put another alum in touch with an organization, you enhanced the Bryant brand. And if the previous scenario happened for you, then you benefited from your Bryant connections.

Isn’t it time to make your relationship with Bryant official?

Transferable skills
You may be surprised at how beneficial engaging with Bryant, students, and faculty can be. When Paul Alderucci ’89, senior IT manager of development, interviewed with the Connecticut General Assembly recently, he discussed how mentoring student-athletes at his alma mater was a skill that would be valuable in the new post.

“I mentioned how I had been working with Bryant student-athletes at the Bryant Bulldog Connections semi-annual event providing direction and suggestions with career paths, interviewing, and branding,” he says. “Mentoring students has a direct correlation to work that people do in their business, and they can use the mentoring experience to forward their careers as well as the person they are mentoring. It can be a symbiotic relationship. Organizations have opportunities to work with undergraduate and graduate student teams, who can write business, marketing, and communication plans. Individuals can take part in career panels, lectures, and one-on-one job shadowing with students.”

“I used the Alumni Career Link as a student to network and gain valuable career information,” says Brendan Sysun ’10, global marketing campaigns program manager at EMC (read his full profile on p. 3). “It’s my absolute pleasure to be able to return the favor as an alum.”

Choose Your Involvement Level
It could be as simple as answering a phone call or an e-mail about your job, or a full mentoring of students and young alumni – whether through a formal program such as job shadowing or something less structured that you define through the Alumni Career Link, an online database of alumni willing to help students and other alumni.

“At Bryant, our goal is to engage alumni in the life of the University in a way that benefits graduates and students,” says Robin Torreton Wurde. And that is why the Office of Alumni Relations is now the Office of Alumni Engagement.

Attend a Bryant event. Cheer on the Bulldogs at any of the 22 varsity athletic competitions. Guest lecture for a professor who teaches in your field. Sponsor the New Venture Competition or any campus event.

Alumni Engagement Day – Friday, March 28, 2014

In response to the evolving needs of the alumni, the Office of Alumni Engagement (formerly known as Alumni Relations) is condensing what had been Alumni Leadership Weekend into a one-day, multi-disciplinary format. This year’s Alumni Engagement Day is Friday, March 28, 2014. Join us for all or part of the day as we compare notes with alumni at Providence, RI and other locations, and celebrate accomplishments and community service of distinguished alumni at the Alumni Achievement Awards. Look for details of the day’s agenda in the February 1 issue of our e-newsletter, Beyond the Archway, and through links on the Alumni Association Linked In and Facebook pages.

It’s easy to be a resource
Join the Alumni Career Link NOW! All members as of February 25 will be entered to win a Bryant “Swag Bag” and gift certificate to the Bryant Bookstore, which can be used in person or online. You choose the level at which you’ll participate: informational interviewing, job shadowing, job search advice, internship advice, graduate school advice. You can also share information about internships you participate in or graduate programs and events.

Transformed student center unveiled

Bryant University reopened the completely transformed student center, a $10 million endeavor that was completed over the summer, in time for alumni to tour the stunning facility during Reunion @ Homecoming, Oct. 11-12, 2013.

The Michael E. ’67 and Karen L. Fisher Student Center, named in honor of the couple who have been stalwart supporters of Bryant for decades, was reimagined by architectural and design firm Ewing Cole with input from students as well as Bryant leadership.

Dozens of alumni on campus for Reunion toured the building. Two alumni who had been students during the evolution of the student center from the Koffler Building to the current location were pleased with the university’s continued development.

“When I first arrived at Bryant nearly 30 years ago, I was struck by the beauty of the Rotunda,” said Tony Cohutt ’88 (Saco, ME). “The Fisher Student Center is one more example of how Bryant has consistently found a way to combine cutting-edge design with functionality on campus. I was very impressed.”

“Even though a lot has changed, I noticed that the feel of the campus did not change, which I liked,” noted Heather (Chase) Ignazewski ’88 (Amherst, NH). “The Koffler Center was a big change ... from a bar, restaurant and bowling alley to a video production/radio station building. I was also impressed with the technology that is in place to support the Communications major.”

Over the last decade, Bryant has added more than 250,000 square feet in facilities and since 1996 has invested more than $180 million in its contemporary campus.

The bright and airy Fisher Student Center offers many spaces to relax, work in groups, and has offices for major student organizations and support centers.

Kim Proctor ’95
Founder, Customers That Click

Some Bryant graduates go on to graduate school. Kim Proctor ‘95 went to Dunkin’ Donuts University.

She was working for the Hill Holliday ad agency in Boston, and Dunkin’ Donuts, her account, required her to learn how to make donuts, muffins, and Coddittas.

Before that, Proctor worked several years at a Dallas ad agency where, as a vegetarian, she was relieved to not tour the meat processing plant of a client she had during that job!

Initially a Business Management major, Proctor changed to Marketing after a conversation with Professor Charles Quigley convinced her that what she likes best about business is the dynamic between a company and its customers.

After working at spirituality.com, csmotor.com and internships.com, Proctor, in 2005, formed her own marketing and customer experience consulting practice, Customers That Click.

“My work is aligned with the emerging industry called ‘customer experience,’” she explains. “While the term, ‘customer experience’ may be new, I focused on business basics. I help organizations meet their goals through improved customer relationships.”

A resident of West Hollywood, CA, Proctor laughingly says she and her husband “can’t leave our home without bumping into celebrities such as Will Ferrell or Jane Lynch; we pretend not to notice them and they, in turn, don’t notice us.”

When not with the rich and famous, she volunteers with cat charities, grows Meyer lemons, and has travelled the world to see British rock band Marillion, known for their dedicated followers since the early ’80s. in concert.

She is grateful for the Bryant alumni events in Southern California and participates in the Alumni Career Link program, providing career advice to students interested in marketing (online and offline) and customer experience. “I want to help students get a clearer view about their career options. Professor Quigley helped me, I’d love to help others.”

Brendan Sysun ’10
Global Marketing Campaigns Program Manager, EMC Corporation

Early morning virtual conferences with India and late-night calls with Singapore and Sydney may be the unglamorous side of having a role in global business, but Brendan Sysun ’10 believes the rewards outweigh any challenges.

“My job isn’t one-dimensional. I get to be strategic and creative at the same time,” he says. “Every day, I discuss rolling out marketing programs and campaigns with colleagues from all corners of the world. The experiences and knowledge I’ve gained from working with global, virtual teams is unlike any other.”

In his job, he explores digital elements such as search engine optimization, online events, webcasts, and social media to touch his customer base. Sysun sees alumni engagement heading in that direction as well.

As a student, Sysun used the Alumni Career Link – a network of alumni who help students in their career exploration process – to develop relationships and receive valuable insight. “I would search for individuals in a field that I wanted to pursue and reach out to them for advice and guidance,” he says. “Bryant alumni were very responsive and helpful in molding my personal brand to get a leg up on the competition.”

Now, as an alumnus, Sysun is eager to return the favor. “I’m pleased to be on the other side of the Alumni Career Link,” he says. He also participates in other events related to Bryant, including the Career Fair as a representative of his company. “Just a year or two earlier, I was in the students’ shoes, eager to speak with interested employers.”

Sysun believes that all alumni, when united, present a powerful front. “Our allegiance to Bryant and Bryant’s allegiance to us doesn’t abruptly end after four years,” he says. “If we continue to work together, then we add power to our ranks every time a graduating class walks through the Archway.”

Sandra Potter ’76 MBA, Ph.D.
Director, Entrepreneurship Program, Bryant University

Sandra Potter ’76 MBA, Ph.D, loves teaching – an unforeseen twist of fate considering that, as a high school senior, already acting entrepreneurially, she discussed less conventional track such as high school guidance counselor

Marketing would be so she decided.

Immediately after receiving an undergrad degree in marketing, Potter pursued an MBA at Bryant to gain an advantage in the technology industry. “Having my MBA definitely helped cast me as someone serious about her career.”

Over the years, Potter worked in management at several high tech firms, started her own consulting practice, taught full time at Bentley College, and, after the tech bubble burst once again, pursued a degree in counseling psychology and worked with teens struggling with mental health issues. “I missed high tech, though,” she says, “so I took a consulting practice post at a Boston firm working with start-ups.”

After a couple more turns in the road, Potter was teaching marketing at her graduate alma mater. “I realized that I wanted to inject some entrepreneurial insight into the curriculum,” she says. “When Bryant decided to develop a full entrepreneurship program, I knew that the timing was right to do so.”

Potter believes that to stay relevant, people and companies must embrace innovation. “Existing firms are looking for employees who understand how to generate, evaluate, and then bring to market products and services that are a match to firm resources and market need.”

One of the things she likes best about Bryant is the willingness of the alumni to help students. She keeps in touch with many of her past students who are now entrepreneurial alumni. “I'm on the boards of a few start-ups that were launched from Bryant. It's amazing to see their progress.”

Bryant’s sesquicentennial – oh, what a year!

2013 marked a pivotal time in Bryant’s history. Less than four percent of accredited colleges and universities in the United States have reached the landmark sesquicentennial. We’ve had an exciting and engaging year.

1863-2013 – 150 years of growth and innovation

From the kickoff event February 1 in the Rotunda to the wrap-up 37th annual Festival of Lights ceremony on December 1, alumni took part in our year-long celebration. In between, members of the Class of 1963 led the Class of 2013 as they processed to Commencement. Our Independence Day celebration in partnership with the Town of Smithfield invited local alumni back for picnicking, music, and fireworks.

In September, special permission was received from Brown University to hold a reception on the lawn of Bryant’s former South Hall classroom building on the East Side of Providence. Alumni from six decades gathered to toast the University’s past and future. The day concluded with a WaterFire sponsored in part by Bryant’s U.S.-China Institute during which alumni participated in the torch-lighting ceremony and then enjoyed Chinese culture and food.

A story of leadership and character

Bryant College Goes to War by Professor Judy Barrett Litoff, Ph.D., was published as part of the celebration of the University’s 150th anniversary. Litoff is a leading authority on the history of American women and World War II. The book features firsthand accounts of wartime as illustrated in thank you letters to the Bryant Service Club.

Founded on March 27, 1942, the student-run club sent cigarettes, candy, cookies, letters, and knitted articles to boost the morale of Bryant alumni stationed in every major theater of war. The club united the student body as never before. By the war’s end, approximately 500 Bryant women and men had received letters and packages from the club, which, in turn, received letters of thanks.

A book launch event on November 20 featured Bryant students, including some wearing their Reserve Officers’ Training Corps uniforms, reading excerpts from a selection of the letters to an audience that included faculty, staff, and students, as well as family members of the alumni soldiers whose letters were read.

After the presentation, 1940s food, including Spam sandwiches, wartime Coca Cola in bottles, Hershey’s chocolate, and Juicy Fruit gum was served.

Cuba I May 22–28, 2014

Join a small group of Bryant alumni on a week-long humanitarian mission in Cuba. Lonely Planet writes: “Twenty-first century Cuba promises to be like nowhere else you’ve ever visited: economically poor, but culturally rich; visibly mildewed, but architecturally magnificent; infuriating, yet at the same time, strangely uplifting.” Havana, once known as the Paris of the Caribbean remains an elegant city, with phenomenal colonial architecture. The Cuban people embody a proud culture that intertwines European and Afro-Cuban cultures, food, music and religion, to form an infectious blend. Such uniqueness is a vanishing commodity, so take this rare opportunity to travel there, something that has only recently become available to US citizens. See it now with Bryant Alumni Travel and be among the first and few to savor the refreshing charm and charisma of Cuba.

China I October 13-23, 2014

Ponder the legends and myths of the Forbidden City, rediscover your sense of wonder on the Great Wall or attempt to fathom the timeless expressions of the silent Terracotta Warriors...Beijing packs in more world-class sites than many countries are able to offer: The Great Wall, Tiananmen Square, the Forbidden City, the Summer Palace, majestic imperial parks...the list goes on and on. We’ll tour a jade carving workshop, meet adorable pandas at the Beijing Zoo, relax in the peaceful Summer Palace, and learn about Chinese artistry with a private lesson on Chinese calligraphy. Travel to the Stone Forest, an extremely rare geological phenomenon dating back to 270 million years ago. We finish up just across the bay from Hong Kong, touring the future site of Bryant University Zhuhai on the campus of Beijing Institute of Technology, Zhuhai.
