A NEW LIFESTYLE
AT BRYANT

A new concept in student housing — Townhouse apartments in a co-educational student community — will be introduced to the campus this fall.

This all-student community will have accommodations for 200 residents living in modern structures, each housing several four bedroom, air conditioned Townhouse apartments. An eighth structure for maintenance and recreation facilities, and a spacious parking area complete the tree lined community-living complex.

Each student in the community will have his or her own bedroom and share a kitchen, ½ baths, and a combination living room-dining room. The electrically heated, two floor apartments are fully furnished, and the kitchen is completely equipped.

Because each Townhouse has its own kitchen and dining facilities, community residents may do their own cooking, and are therefore not required to pay for regular college dining services.

Each student will sign a lease for his share of the apartment on a 10-month academic year basis.

Construction began late last year, and the units should be ready for occupancy well before the opening of classes in September.
The Bryant College Energy Conservation Committee made recommendations in its report last fall, and stressed the need for all members of the College community to be energy conscious at all times. The recommendations were accepted and heeded. Comparing December and January for the past two years, gas consumption was down an average of 33%, and electricity was down an average of 12%. I am personally gratified at the response, recognizing that December 1973 was a relatively mild month.

A visitation team from the New England Association of Schools and Colleges will review our facilities and courses this month. Our last review was in 1968. Normally, there is approximately ten years between these visitations, but our move to the new campus prompted the Association to narrow the time between reviews. We welcome this shortened interval because of the vast improvement in facilities and curriculum, and the progress we have made in all phases of the educational process. I feel strongly that the visitation team will be extremely impressed with your alma mater.

The accomplishments of our students and our alumni reflect upon the College and strengthen our reputation. We can take pride in the fact that of the 22 CPA’s in Rhode Island who recently received their certificates, 13 were Bryant undergraduates and 2 had taken CPA review courses at Bryant. One of the 15 received Honorable Mention from the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, joining a select group of 57 out of the 33,497 who took the examination nationally.

There is a trend for entering students to turn to state and local colleges because of rising tuition and the energy crisis. This trend should not, however, adversely affect our enrollment because of the excellent rapport our admissions counselors have established with the high schools and junior colleges from which the majority of our entering and transfer students come. George Craig, our Dean of Admissions, shares my optimism.

Townhouse living, a new concept in campus life, will be introduced this fall. The Townhouse Village project is well underway and the units will be available for occupancy for the fall term.

Our beautiful entrance drive to the campus will be dedicated as the Jacobs Drive on May 7, honoring the Jacobs family. Dr. Henry L. Jacobs was President of Bryant for 55 years, and was succeeded by his son, Dr. E. Gardner Jacobs, now President Emeritus and Chancellor of the College.

This year Bryant College will be the first college in Rhode Island to hold commencement activities, on May 18. There are several good reasons for this, namely, the energy crunch, and the length of time between final exams and traditional exercises, usually three weeks. Classes will officially end May 17.

Finally, I would like to congratulate our varsity athletic teams — hockey, bowling, and basketball — for their fine records and regional and national recognition.

Henry F. Evans
President, Bryant College
Are there opportunities for professionals in management? One evening towards the end of a class discussion, a student remarked, "I have been attending class for five years, and I keep hearing about sound principles of management, but when I go back to work I don't find them in practice."

Are we making any progress? Recently, I had the occasion to address a group of businessmen with a primary interest in personnel administration. Since the group was open to new approaches in guest speaker presentations, I tried an experiment: Instead of giving a lecture, I based my presentation on a series of questions dealing with the latest findings on the principles of management.

Naturally, I was not there to pass judgment or give a grade as would be the case in the classroom, but from the majority of responses in answer to the questions posed, it was clear that in the overall picture, the group would have required a large correction factor in order to bring the grades within a passing range. Some of these questions are given at the end of this article and you may test yourself against the kind of information we are imparting to students whom you will soon meet in business.

It should be mentioned at this point that scholars have been wrong in the past and present, and can be expected to be wrong in the future. This article is also an open invitation to the readers to tell us what answers are wrong and why you may believe that they are wrong.

A favorite cop-out is to say, "We're talking theory and you're talking practice and vice versa." Truly any sound theory must also logically be sound practice; otherwise, we are back in the middle ages speculating on the number of angels on a pinhead. Practice is the proving ground of theory.

One of the major theories being expounded in school is management by objectives. Book after book and article after article have been written on the subject and yet this simple theory seems to be more of a buzz phrase than a reality.

For instance, each semester I ask students, particularly in the evening school, "How many of you who are employed have a job description?"; approximately 25% answer that they do. Second I ask, "How many of you have a statement of job objectives as part of your job description?"; it is a rare night when the affirmative answer exceeds 5%.

The author has had a series of experiences as a consultant, a manager in both line and staff, and has seen the consequences of not having objectives and the rich opportunities for improving management effectiveness by introducing management by objectives as one part of an overall attempt to put management into the 20th Century.

When you ask businessmen about statements of objectives, there are a number of cop-outs. Among the more popular are: We wish to keep the job flexible, we like to see people exercise their initiative, everyone knows what his job is, etc. An objective evaluation of these answers would very well reveal just how difficult it is to have a man doing a job when he has no clear perception of what he is truly trying to accomplish.

Another favorite response is, "We're in business to make a profit." Owners profits, or even the necessity for profits for any business enterprise, is apt to be a very abstract objective to a worker putting resistors in a color television set.

The professional journals and popular literature are full of studies showing that boredom and lack of challenge extends even to the very top ranks of business. Some of this could very well be attributed to the fact that few people find a challenge in a job which has no meaningful objective that they can understand. Assuming you are in business or in a managerial capacity ask yourself the question, "Do I really know what the objectives of my job are?" "Have I reached an agreement on these objectives with my immediate superior?" Next, "Have I reached an agreement with my subordinates on the objectives of their job?"

The concept of management by objectives was available to us in the 20's, at least if we had read some of John Dewey's work in the field of education. Some attribute the emergence of management by objectives to Ralph Davis in 1939. Others attribute it to Kurt Lewin at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the 50's. Whichever date you choose, there appears to have been a long time between academic awareness of the principle and practical usage.

How much longer should we wait before we put this concept to work for us? Or, does the business community know something we don't about which precludes the use of management by objectives.

American business has in some measure received world wide recognition of its competence in business management. A recent study provided by the Beta Gamma Sigma honorary society shows that increasingly it is the business school graduate taking over at the top level of American business enterprises. Can we rest on our laurels?

If what we teach is wrong, then we need to know so that we may improve our theories. Where our theories are sound, putting them to work presents a major opportunity for professionals in management.

Now, test yourself.

WJMF-FM RECEIVES F.C.C. APPROVAL

At 8:30 A.M. on Friday, February 8, 1974, Bryant radio station, WJMF, officially began broadcasting on the intercom system of the College. The intercom system broadcasting is an interim measure pending arrival of equipment to take full advantage of the FCC approval of WJMF as an FM station.

Broadcasting followed the dissolution of a number of problems including the petitioning of WTEV to the FCC to deny the license on the basis that WJMF would interfere with their frequency. The FCC apparently found no interference and threw out the case.

ABC’S OF ZIP AND OCR IS PUBLISHED

Mary Jane Pelkey ’62, Assistant Professor in the Department of Secretarial and Office Education, has published an informational booklet entitled “The ABC's of ZIP and OCR.”

In 1967, the U.S. Post Office began the full-time operation of its Optical Character Reader (OCR) in Detroit. These electronic mail sorters have been installed in many central post offices throughout the country to speed the sorting and routing of mail.

Miss Pelkey's folder spells out the rules and regulations which will help you speed your mail along the way. The folder has a complete set of rules and guidelines, with illustrations of proper and improper formats.

Copies are available on request from the Alumni Office.
The basketball team set a season scoring record, captured its third straight Naismith Conference championship and gained a berth in the NAIA Regional tournament, all in one game, as it posted a 78-69 triumph over Babson in their Naismith showdown at Smithfield.

The victory, our eighth in 10 Naismith contests and its 18th in 25 games overall, gave us the conference title by one game over Babson and the automatic berth in the NAIA playoff tourney.

The 78 points gave the Indians a total of 2,120 this season, topping the old record of 2,073, set by the 1966-67 team that posted a 22-2 record under Coach Tom Duffy.

Sophomore star, Dave Sorafine, set an individual season-scoring mark by netting a total of 638 points, topping the old record of 629, set by Tom Smile.

Sorafine was named to five consecutive Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference teams, chosen weekly by the ECAC selection committee. He was also a candidate for the All-East ECAC team.
INDIAN BOWLING DUO TAKES EASTERN DOUBLES

The tandem of sophomore, Joe Kubiskey and freshman, Ken McKenzie captured first place in the Eastern Intercollegiate Bowling Conference Double Championships at Bowlmore, New York City, on Feb. 17. The “super duo” combined for an eight game total of 3095 pins. The Bryant total was 60 pins better than the second place finisher Drexel. Drexel amassed a total pin fall of 3032, and the Redmen of St. John were right behind them with a 3015 total.

Kubiskey, a native of Pawtucket and McKenzie, a Warwick resident, were on top right from the start of the tournament. Joe averaged a phenomenal 199.1 per game, while freshman sensation McKenzie contributed a steady 191.2. Kubiskey’s scores are even more impressive considering he was on crutches until Thursday. Joe had sustained a knee injury, and there was considerable doubt whether he would be ready in time for the tournament.

Without a doubt, the Eastern Doubles Title is perhaps the greatest jewel that any Indian Bowling Team has ever won. The sixteen team field was composed of such notables as Villanova, Iona, West Point, the University of Massachusetts, Rutgers, and Worcester Poly. A second Bryant duo in the competition finished an outstanding seventh overall. Bob Foster and Bill McKee just missed the first day cut by falling just 30 pins behind the sixth place team.

All of the semifinalist bowlers qualified for the tournament by regional rolloffs held throughout the East Coast. Kubiskey-McKenzie and Foster-McKee scored 3056 and 3024 respectively in the eight game qualifying sets. The tandems were joined by a duo from the University of Massachusetts as the New England representatives in the classic. By winning the championship, Joe Kubiskey and Ken McKenzie automatically qualify for next year’s event. Also, Joe and Ken finished one-two in best individual performance.

HOCKEY

The hockey team completed a very successful inaugural season by winning thirteen games and losing eight, and by finishing as one of the top seven teams in the ECAC, Division 3.

In one of the top games, Captain-Goalie Phillip Cerrone made 52 saves in a 5-4 overtime loss to Worcester State, Division 3’s undefeated leader.

Coach Bob Reale’s prospects for 1974-75 appear even brighter as all players except Capt. Cerrone will be returning.

SWIMMING

While the swimming team posted only a 1-5 record, its progress is evidenced in the fact that all but two of the previous years’ records were surpassed.

Answers to Questions

Management Self Quiz

1. False. Somehow we become wedded to, and overinvested in, our technology, making it difficult to change. (Computers anyone?)
2. False. Little correlation has been found between intelligence and creativity. (We all have a chance.)
3. False. There are some dollar-andscents findings that the boss becomes more effective when employees have part in his education. (It hurts the ego at first, but it works.)
4. True. In general for better educated audiences.
   False. In general for less educated audiences.
   (Trick question—only a teacher could make up this one. One reason students rebel and swallow live goldfish.)
5. a) at the end. (When you have an appointment in Chicago, don’t reach for the airline schedule until you find out how long O’Hare airport taxi lines can be.)
6. b) company policy. (Remember Herzberg, “The Motivation To Work,” 2nd ed. 1959. You can do all you want to improve company policy, but it is a “dissatisfier.” A “satisfier” is the work itself, the achievement, the advancement, and the responsibility.)
7. c) The manager is in charge of work. (We’ve come a long way from the mill town?)

P.S.: Which of the above answers is wrong? We’d like to hear from you.
CENTER FOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT

A NEW FOCUS

Bryant College established the Center for Management Development in the fall of 1973 to create an educational link with external business organizations. The Center identifies a new educational focus for Bryant College — the education, training, and development of the human resources in business, government, education, social and professional organizations.

More and more, external organizations are turning to academic institutions for educational solutions to their organizational problems and for the development of managerial talent. The institutions offer a common ground of mutual advantage where virtually unlimited resources of ideas and energies may be exchanged between the classroom and the executive suite. Apart from a few executive management programs of national repute, no such forum for sophisticated corporate-academic contacts exists in the entire New England area. The Center will provide such a forum, and will be concerned with every aspect of organizational management and responsibility.

The establishment of the Center for Management Development may imply that there exists an acute shortage of managerial manpower, but the implications are not entirely true. The constant search for managerial competence is an organizational fact of life. The managerial expertise must be identified, developed, and maintained. It has become increasingly recognized that the value of an employee — from top management to the first line supervisor — can be increased through the appropriate educational, development, or training process.

The very nature of our changing society is a mandate that requires organizations to remain educationally current and to encourage the development of its human resources. Due to the obsolescence of knowledge, rapidly changing technology, vacillating national priorities, the increasing impact of social and cultural forces, it has been estimated that “knowledge doubles every ten years.” With such pressures the education of the nation’s work force is not only desirable, but necessary.

The Center does not intend to be, nor can it be, all things to all people. Many development and training needs are most appropriately addressed and resolved by internal staff. There are many other organizational areas which may require educational solutions and may be met on a shared basis with other similar organizations. In addition to seminars designed for representatives from many different organizations, the Center is available to fulfill individual needs for specific programs where the resources of the Center would be appropriate.

All programs designed and implemented by the Center for Management Development will include certain common denominators:

- Response to an identified need.
- Dedication to a specific educational objective.
- Tailor-made design to meet the needs.
- Faculty and curricular materials assembled to suit the design.
- Evaluation of results.
- Establishment of a feedback process to facilitate restatement of objectives, design modifications, and reassessment.

The seminars and programs developed by the Center may have a local, regional, or national orientation, and may vary in length from a one-day seminar to an intense two-week live-in program on the Bryant campus. As dictated by the program design and content, specialists will be assembled to conduct the programs.

At a time when the educational influence of Bryant College is expanding, at a time when Bryant has a reputation for providing quality education with a practical orientation, at a time when Bryant is perceived as being responsive to educational demand, it is important that Bryant meet the educational demands where they exist and adapt to changing needs of the society which it serves. The Center for Management Development will focus on the optimal development of human resources in organizations and anticipates the challenge of achieving these objectives.

Philip R. Graf, Director of the Center for Management Development, received his M.B.A. in organizational behavior from Ohio University. Formerly the Assistant to the President of Bryant College, Mr. Graf has worked in program development and in the Division of Research at Ohio University. He is the author of several published research papers, and was recently a faculty member of the 1973 African Advanced Management Program, in Zambia.
