CAPS

Response to the Computer Alumni Placement Service (CAPS) has been just great. The Alumni input forms are being programmed into the computer as they are received. Director of Career Planning and Placement, Stanley Shuman, anticipates that corporate job openings will also be programmed in shortly on a continuing basis.

Just a reminder—

The CAPS program is for alumni who are actively seeking a position. The Input Form can be activated at any time you feel a need for a change of employment. Also, some alumni have returned their input form (the green one), but have omitted the resume which has been requested. Be sure to send both.

For your information, corporate representatives—not the Placement Office—will directly contact graduates when credentials and job specifications are matched. Traditional interviews will then be scheduled on a mutually convenient basis.

*Special appointment by Alumni Association President
Liason to Bryant's Old Guard
I've heard it said that fifty percent, at least, of the modern college president's time and energy is, or ought to be, devoted to fundraising. The past few months, since I last spoke to you from this page, have certainly confirmed this saying. Fortunately for Bryant, our efforts have produced results of the most encouraging kind.

Approximately a year ago a strategy-meeting of our Development Committee drew up some careful plans for the coming year, and we set ourselves a goal of $300,000 per annum in "new money" contributions to the college Development Fund. As of the end of February of this year, we have received $415,000 in pledges and contributions to the Fund.

During the past few months, also, we have made a special effort to increase the membership of the Bryant College President's Club. This is a select group of alumni who serve in an advisory capacity to the President and are convened periodically to discuss objectives and activities of the College. Members contribute $1,000 in cash to the College within the year of their membership. We're still recruiting, but as of this writing the club numbers eighteen. I'll have more to tell you about this group and its activities in future issues.

In addition to major support for our Development Fund, the Alumni Office reports to me that our alums are outdoing themselves in generosity to the '72-'73 Annual Fund. This year's drive is barely off the ground, and we have already realized more than $12,000 in unrestricted donations, as well as another $60,000 in restricted gifts from the alumni to the development and other special funds. Dave Gardam '52 is heading up the Annual Fund for the second straight year. We're grateful for his interest and know-how. And let me say thanks, too, while I'm about it, to all of you who have made gifts so far this year. To those of you who are still keeping that contribution in the top drawer and haven't mailed it yet, let me ask you to jump on the bandwagon now. We need your help, in concern for Bryant's future, and in dollars to pay the future's bills.

Speaking of Dave Gardam, he'll be at Bryant as guest speaker for our 1973 Senior Class Luncheon. This is getting to be one of the year-end events we look forward to with the greatest pleasure. Dave's topic will be "The First Amendment, and Broadcast Journalism", a pretty timely subject for an NBC executive!

I'll have a few more things to talk about next issue, but for now I wanted you to share a bit in the progress Bryant has made in the area of private philanthropy. Volunteer contributions are a form of "investment", and I thought you'd be delighted to know that more and more people seem to be considering your alma mater as a college with a future!

THE CHANGING ROLE OF EDUCATION. SOME OF THE CHALLENGES HIGHER EDUCATION FACES TODAY.

Gertrude Meth Hochberg

The trend of changes in education seems unmistakable. We are seeing a relaxation of the old standardized approach with a premium on independent and individualized study and on using the resources of the community, while serving that community at the same time. Are these changes new? And how fast are they being implemented?

These changes, like virtually all apparent innovations in education, are perhaps not as new as they seem. The business of teaching and learning has been going on for so many thousands of years that it is difficult to find anything truly new under the sun of education. The changes are entirely consistent with the expansionist tradition of American education, from the land-grant colleges truly revolutionary concept of direct service to agriculture and industry through the open door idealism of the G. 1. Bill of Rights and finally to the removal of economic and racial barriers.

It is easy to overestimate the nature and the temper of these changes. The pace actually remains slow. Conservatism, always strong in education on professional grounds, is currently being reinforced simultaneously by economics and politics. And it is a fact that the changes that have already taken place are little understood and appreciated.

Criticism of higher education abound on every side. One cannot pick up a newspaper, magazine, listen to a "talk show" or view a TV program without hearing conflicting ideas on the purposes and the directions of higher education today.

Add to this the diversity of our higher educational system, which is unique. The United States has more educational institutions, more colleges and universities than the rest of the world put together. In this small state of Rhode Island, we have publicly controlled and privately controlled institutions, colleges of art and design, liberal arts, junior community colleges, colleges of teacher education and business education, vocational schools, "universities without walls" and loosely structured neighborhood colleges—12 in all.

There never has been a time in which higher education was more like a whirlwind of five or six jet-streams, hitting upon each other, causing feelings and thoughts about education to be churned up and thrown out in a thousand different fragments.

Let us remember, however, that where we are has largely been determined by where we have been. Higher education on the college or university level began in the 12th century in France and Italy and is a fascinating story of which the 250 years of American college and university existence is a brief late chapter. Colleges and universities came about primarily because authorities had outgrown their ability to pass from generation to generation the accrued information, knowledge, and wisdom.

In the 12th century a university was formed to train specialists, and as such, it performed its task well. It passed along specialized information and provided apprenticeships for men who would be entering the professions needed, namely those of priests, theologians, lawyers, statesmen and doctors. At the same time, a second kind of education was already occurring—the education of the ruler, the elite upperclass gentleman, who did have a kind of wisdom of the ages and used informal higher education to complement his political skills and to provide the attributes required for the enjoyment of leisure and for thinking in ways that were peculiarly human.

The kind of education these men and women received was one that would permit them to appreciate art, beauty and literature—with the advent of printing—to enjoy literature, philosophy, and history. This was education for pleasure and for appreciation of the finer things the human mind could bring forth in each period.

*Director of Public Relations, Bryant College; and First Chairman, Governor's Commission on Women. Guest speaker, Newport Country Branch of the American Association of University Women, March 1st, 1973.
The philosophy of the perfectibility of man, with new ideas about knowledge assisting the evolution of the human species and with new ways of reaching and enlightening people in the 19th century arrived with Freud as the spearhead. It introduced a third idea to the purposes of education. This third area stressed that each human being is capable of involvement and that the highest good in education is that which permits the individual to fully realize his potential and to utilize all his innate gifts.

These three streams that I have briefly sketched for you are all a part of the conventional wisdom of higher education. If any of you doubt it, I suggest you read your own College catalog and study the introductory statement. You will find every conceivable mixture and mutation of these three main purposes of higher education. Just this week in writing the aims and objectives of the Bryant College Catalog, I found myself saying "the primary objective of Bryant College is the intellectual and professional development of each student creating in him an awareness of his own intrinsic worth and a sense of responsibility as a future business leader. Bryant bases its program on the promise that it seeks to prepare men and women to take an active part in our culture and society". Yes, it is a peculiarly American phenomenon that we tried to weld these three different purposes into a single kind of education. And, as you well know, higher education in this country then added to these a fourth, which is the extension of human knowledge.

Higher education, as it had come to be in the 1960's, had not only the idea behind it of advancing human knowledge but also the training of specialists, and of preparing men and women to be better human beings, and educating them to enjoy their humanity.

This thinking has led us into the twofold approach in education: to prepare students to earn a living, and to prepare them to live a life. These two objectives are compatible—indeed reinforce—one another.

In fact, there is a school of thought that maintains that such Career Education is what all education should be. The theory being that career education enables an individual to develop his creative potential, and which guides him in the constructive use of his talents.

Concomitantly, the student need not sacrifice his growth as a human being nor his advancement in the arts and sciences. The career-oriented institution I know best and with which I have been associated for some twenty years has broadened its curriculum so that its men and women are prepared to take a more active role in politics and civic affairs, to join the war against racial discrimination, poverty and all the social ills of our time. Blending specialized education in business techniques with the liberal arts subjects required for an enriched life makes for useful citizenship. At this point in time, fifty per cent of the curriculum at Bryant is devoted to the cultural subjects—literature, music appreciation, history, civilization, political science, anthropology, government, international relations, minorities, biology, microbiology, psychology, earth sciences, etc.

Colleges of business education are no longer places simply for men and women who want to work for large corporations. There's a whole new wave of people going to schools like Bryant who want to make contributions in as many varied areas as you can imagine—the arts, urban affairs, management, health care, government education—using their recently gained degrees in business education to control resources—human resources, because these are first and most precious; people and their talents, then products and money. All of these resources must be directed toward the best interest of society and in the advancement of our civilization.

Students like these bring forth a new requirement in education and demand new modes of learning and teaching. The irreversible changes of our society today will undoubtedly cause education to increase career-directed programs. They underline the need for the acquisition of subject matter needed to cope with the concerns of our times—poverty, discrimination and other manifestations of human sufferings which are the major issues of our day.

Parenthetically, the change of locale at Bryant, the move to suburban Smithfield and the strikingly modern architecture has improved and changed the attitude of students, teachers and administrators. Daily study and activities in this light, vibrant, glass-walled edifice makes for quick and easy confrontation and a close-to-nature atmosphere very much in keeping with the ecology-developments of our day. Educational developments are ahead of and in keeping with this new campus. Standards have been raised, the quality of students improved and the curriculum has been broadened and intensified.

One senses this vibrant, vital and dynamic environment as soon as one enters the glass-domed rotunda which is the focal meeting place for the entire campus population. Or as one reporter put it, "the highlight of the Bryant unistructure is its central core, a three-story plexi-glass domed meeting place situated where the members of the x-shaped building meet. Here, students mill, meet, and muse."

The demands of business in the executive suite and the particular type of counseling in high schools have resulted in a preponderance of male students in the campus population. This brings me to the next idea that has been challenged recently, although the challenge began 100 years ago, the idea that women have less ability than men.
ability than men. Thus, too, is part of a profound social revolution that is not likely to be reversed.

Obsolete guidance and counseling methods in the public school systems have for years stratified and even annihilated the aspirations of potential black leaders, either passively by ignorance and inertia, or actively out of motives based on myth and stereotype as well as blatant prejudice. It is the same kind of discrimination that has prevented young high school women from choosing careers of leadership in all areas, including those of management and a direct path to the executive suite, not necessarily as the boss’s secretary. (See addenda for Bryant Alumni)

As Wilma Scott-Heide, president of the National Organization for Women puts it... "In higher education, ratios, quota systems, fellowship and scholarship awards favor the male in direct ways and negative attitudes of faculty and staff discourage women in more subtle ways. We decry the foot-binding of Chinese women, but the direct and subtle mind-binding of women in the United States and other western countries may be even worse!"

To counteract this kind of discrimination and to encourage and even inspire young women of high school age to set their sights higher, away from the secretarial level and up toward management leadership, this College staged a Symposium for the Advancement of Women in Business last October. 500 high school senior women and their counselors representing 100 high schools in this area attended. We felt that it was at this critical juncture in the lives of young women, where career choices are made, that young women needed to be aware of the educational preparation needed for positions at the administrative level. Role models in the guise of successful women headed the panel sessions and a special indoctrination session was held for their counselors. Best of all, this event was supported and sponsored by large business corporations, banks, industries, who not only attended (male executives that is) but also funded this event with a series of scholarships presented to the young women in attendance.

These sponsoring corporations were not doing this entirely as a "labor of love" nor in any great spirit of altruism or change of attitude toward women in leadership positions. Companies doing business with the federal government today are especially alerted to the need for developing these "Affirmative Action" programs for women in accordance with Revised Order 4, which went into effect April 2, 1972. Hence, it behooved them to cooperate in order to encourage and to find qualified women for the high level positions the government insists that they hire. Employers now have a mandate to offer equal access to good jobs. A mere trickle of women have heretofore been encouraged to go on to higher education in business management.

Dr. Juanita M. Kreps, James Duke Professor of Economics at Duke University and the only woman member of the Governing Board of The New York Stock Exchange, was our keynote speaker and her meaningful talk "Femininity Is Not Enough!" was enthusiastically received. Feminist friends have written to applaud this effort to catch young women at the high school level where such inspiration is needed.

However, this does not preclude the fact that women of all ages and all stages in life do not need this kind of motivation and renewal of effort and education to overcome sex discrimination in their efforts to realize themselves and enjoy the opportunities and options not open to them at the present time.

As a member of the Governor’s Advisory Commission on Women, the statistics and stories of sex segregation and sex discrimination which come our way overwhelm us with their inequities and the amount of work necessary to win equal opportunity for women. Right here in Rhode Island more than 104,000 women are at work outside the home, most of them in menial jobs. Nationally it is a well known fact that the average wage of a college-educated woman equals the same wage as that of a man who has completed no more schooling than that of the eighth grade. More than 42% of all mothers in the U. S. hold jobs outside their homes. On the level of managers, officials and proprietors, the median wage of men is $14,400 while the median wage of women in this category is $9,200. This is one of the key factors in today’s unrest.

We must also realize that we have a new interest and new awakening to the fact that with the extension of the life expectancy of men and women beyond fifty years there will be learners of many ages. It will no longer be adequate to have only young people designated as those who obtain training in colleges and universities between the magic ages of 18 and 22. Their knowledge will become obsolete.

With rapid changes in our society, from 50 to 80 per cent of the information taught in colleges will be obsolete within the first ten years after graduation. And with professions changing very much as heavy demands are placed upon them, and as new information is accrued and new skills developed, more and more functions will be turned over to computers. We now discover that most of us will be required to continue learning throughout our lifetime. This means that we have a brand new population of potential students, extending from the 18 year olds to those with the common life expectancy age of 70.

Continuing education therefore assumes greater importance in our longtime planning program. Lifetime learning holds a vast sense of promise for revitalizing and changing lives, for assisting men and women to be more fully human and to make a greater contribution to one another. Additionally such education must provide for the interaction of old and young.
Margaret Mead continues to espouse the need for younger people to have warm relationships with many older people so that children may be raised in continuing widening circles of affection for family, community, country, planet. Children who will care enough for each circle to be willing to make any sacrifice for its well-being and who will not find life stale or meaning- less, as they so often do now, but will find it exciting, exhilarating and exciting.

Education must contribute to this cycle of loving and living—to glorifying the individual. More than a dispenser of information, the teacher must be a conveyor of values, a philosopher. We, who educate, work to touch individual lives. Whatever the changes may be, it is our job and moral responsibility to search for the value systems that can be used by the individual in rapidly changing situations.

For it is this individuality that is our real challenge. It is this diversity, this emphasis on humanity or humane values, that we must cherish. In it is the real promise of our future.

*BRYANT COLLEGE— IN 1893 . . .
A REVOLUTIONARY EXPERIMENT*

Bryant College has pioneered careers for women. Coeducational since 1893, the College has continuously advanced the status of women all of its 110 years.

Higher education for business was a revolutionary experiment in 1893, and even more revolutionary was the education of women for careers in business. Before this time, American women could only venture outside the home as missionaries, teachers, or nurses. An early Bryant catalog (1868) justified this daring innovation with the statement, "as far as has been ascertained, there is no inherent intellectual difference between men and women".

No less an authority than Dr. Pauli Murray, famous feminist, civil rights leader, jurist, author, and college professor, reminds us that today's Rhode Island Women's Revolution started at Bryant. It all began in 1963 when we presented as our Main Centennial Event, an Academic Symposium and Convocation on the Status of Women in America.

This memorable event is believed to be the first staged by any college immediately following the report of President Kennedy's Commission on the Status of Women in America. This distinguished committee was headed by Eleanor Roosevelt.

Five hundred leading men and women, representing influential social services, government, educational and professional organizations heard such speakers as U.S. Congressman from Rhode Island, the Honorable John E. Fogarty; Dr. Pauli Murray, then Senior Fellow, Yale Law School; Marion Stephenson, Vice President of NBC; Wilma Soss, President, Federation of Women Shareholders in American Business, Inc.; Dr. Jessie Bernard, Professor of Sociology, University of Pennsylvania; Dr. Margaret Ackroyd, Chief Women's Division Rhode Island Department of Labor, and Esther Peterson.

The special greeting for this Symposium from President Kennedy to Dr. E. Gardner Jacobs, President of Bryant, bore the date, "The White House, Washington, D.C., November 18, 1963". It is believed to be one of the last messages sent by President Kennedy before he was assassinated.

The first Rhode Island Women's Commission appointed by Governor John Chafee in 1965 and the subsequent Permanent Advisory Commission appointed in 1970 and activated by a special act of the Legislature were undoubtedly inspired by this event. At least three of the original Symposium leaders are still identified with these groups. "Rhode Island Women's Day" in October of 1971 which brought 1,000 women to a day-long program for the purpose of "learning how to participate more fully and freely in the social, political and economic life of our state" was also a direct result of Bryant's activity. This event was held in the Rotunda of the State House.

Last year, Bryant College continued its tradition of motivating women to raise their career sights, with a Symposium for the Advancement of Women in Business, designed to inform high school senior women and their counselors of the opportunities and challenges of administrative careers for women in business today.

Bryant did not have to go farther than its own successful women for panel speakers, discussion leaders and inspiration. These were considered "career-role-models" for the 500 high school students and counselors attending this event. These included: Anna Bozaro, Office Audit Supervisor, U.S. Internal Revenue Service; Marylou Gulski, Director of Auxiliary Services, Wheaton College; Elizabeth A. Neilan, Vice-President, Old Stone Bank; Dr. Gaytha Langlois, Professor of Physical Sciences at Bryant College; Charlotte Lowrey, Director of the Extension Division, Brown University; Josephine Murgo, Field Auditor, U.S. Internal Revenue Service; and Gertrude M. Hochberg, Director of Public Relations at Bryant.

Bryant has continued uninterruptedly for all of its 110 years to foster and nurture equal opportunity for women. Its thousands of women graduates have made significant contributions to business and industry as well as to the running of their homes, the bringing up of their families, as well as participating in the social, political, and educational activities of the communities.

As pioneers in the education of women for careers in business, this College has reason to believe that throughout its history it has helped women live lives of usefulness and fulfillment.
Ah, yes, those were the days . . .

It was a delightful surprise when Edmond Perregeaux brought us this photograph of the 1913 Baseball Team.

Sports

The Bryant College Indians won their first Dr. James Naismith Basketball Conference championship since the 1966-67 season. They held three co-championships in the Conference (1968-1970-1972). Coach Tom Folliard's team had an automatic bid to the N.A.I.A. playoffs. They finished second in the District 32 region, losing to Quinnipiac College following a win over Boston State by a score of 74-71.

Against a strong Rhode Island College team, the Indians triumphed over the Anchormen by an 84-69 score in a game played February 12 in the Providence Civic Center. Outstanding in this confrontation were Ray Depelteau, Bruce Stewart, Brian Ahern, Henry Gonzalez, and Dave Sorafine.

Depelteau and Stewart have also achieved membership in the 1000 Point Club. Other members are Tom Smile (1967), George Yates (1970), Bob Chuprevich (1970), and Don Gray (1970).

The Indians sub-varsity quintet, under the coaching of Joe Fowlkes, is on its way to becoming the top sub-varsity squad in Bryant history. Led by several outstanding freshmen, the young Indians have registered an impressive record. Included in these triumphs are victories over Rhode Island Junior College and Johnson and Wales Junior College, two of the top ranked junior college teams in the East.

Paul Melvin, a freshman forward from Danbury, Connecticut, averaging 18 points and spearheading the rebounding effort for the team.

Swimming

For their first year of competition, our swim team has several records to their credit. In N.A.I.A. Regional Championships held at Bridgewater State College they placed sixth. Several of the boys had outstanding performances. Among them Mark Rafferty in the sprints, John Johnston in the distance events, and Arthur Burrows and John Copley in the middle distances.

Tennis

Coach John Gillooly has five boys back from last year's team, including David Wage, Ted Weiner and Peter Charland. Co-captains will be Weiner and Charland.

Track and Baseball

The strength and potential of the teams that will take the field for Bryant looks good, but it's still early to report very much. Coaches Lee Drury and Steve Thornton have had a good response from the boys, and we can expect to report more to you in the next issue of the magazine.
Alumni 48 — Sub-varsity 100

It all happened Saturday evening, February 17. And, it was jist like old times.

There on the bench was Coach Tom Duffy, flanked by fifteen alumni from the varsity teams of years past, ready to do battle with the Bryant sub-varsity. It was the largest returning group to respond to invitations sent by the Athletic Office staff.

For the ecstasy, or agony, of alumni fans across the country and around the world, here's the box score.
