You may be looking at this article for an answer as to who won the debates overall. Kerry or Bush? Chances are that if you even need to ask that question, you probably have already decided who you will be voting for come November. Based on the way this election season has gone so far, it seems that the only consistent votes are coming from diehard Democrats and Republicans. According to debate analyst Sid Krause, the majority of the voting population appears to be “riding the fence” so to speak, to the very end.

Prior to the October 1 debate, national renown debate critic Sid Krause looked to the podium to speak to the Bryn Mawr community concerning the Presidential debate.

An expert in his field, Krause has attended every Presidential debate from 1976 up until this year. In his opening statement, he called the debate “The closest horse race in history.”

Throughout his speech he would continue to make strong comparisons between the two emphasizing the right jockey (campaign advisor) and the horse (the presidential candidate) as both being key elements to winning the race (the election).

That being said, he commented on the Kennedy vs. Nixon debate of 1960 and the important role of the impressions made by the candidates to the public. How room temperature is monitored, height is opened off, and questions are strategically picked.

Television Presidential debates have almost become a tool manipulated to portray only what the candidates want and not what the people really look to see.

For that reason and Krause agreed, it may not be much longer till people no longer

In a previous article, the focus was on DPS and its role in campus security. A large part of that article concentrated on the four emergency phones located here on campus. Upon further investigation, some questions surfaced in regards to just how well these phones worked.

While members of the Archway staff were testing the phones to ensure their functionality on Tuesday, September 21, some suspicions of malfunctions in the phone were confirmed to be true.

George Coronado, the head of DPS, was later sought out for his comments on the findings of this investigation. The first phone that was tested is located in the new townhouse parking lot. It worked perfectly — that is, the blue lights worked as well as the phone itself. The second phone investigated is located at the edge of the football field in the C parking lot. The lights were working; so the phone was easy to locate.

However, there was no contact made to DPS as the phone did not function at all. Besides the technical malfunction, the phone was rather difficult to access because one has to climb over a plastic construction fence to access the phone. The next phone tested was the phone in C parking lot, which was

The new effort which President Ronald MacHrieley entitled the “Seniors Stay Connected Program,” calls for seniors to keep their laptops free of charge upon graduation. Bryn’s laptop program, which was born two years ago when the class of 2006 was provided with laptops to use while they studied, has since gone through a major upgrade.

The ideaspawned “when we began to look at the price structure,” Machriezy recalled “I may have suggested that we figure out a way to give them to seniors.”

From this point the school ran some financial analysis to determine if it would be cost feasible. It in fact was;

with the price of new technology falling, Bryn was able to purchase the newest round of computers (ThinkPad R51) instead of leasing them as they had done in the past.

These computers are now held by the class of 2008 and 2006. In two years the class of 2008 will have the opportunity to buy-out the laptops, those bought-out will be sold to a third party dealer. The money generated by the sale of these Computers will cover the expense of giving the laptop to the class of 2006. All of this is being done at no additional cost.

Helping graduates is the main focus of the new program. Machtley, who considers it to be “our graduation gift to seniors”, sees the following program benefits:

- It can be explained that even though reducing prices of technology you are still looking to buy a brand new similarly equipped machine, “we are saving graduates money.”

- Secondly, it is saving students the hassle of transferring contacts, files, and programs which have been established during the two years.

- We want graduates to feel that we didn’t nickel and dime them,” Machtley said “we could just give it as a gesture of good will and down the road people will be more likely to give back to the school.”

- Machtley also hopes that since the laptops in the possession of the class of 2006 are their personal property, people will be more careful with them.

This was the new acquisition of the laptops, through purchase rather than by a capital investment rather than by operational investment. Capital investments require board approval.

Emergency phones fixed

The phone in C parking lot, which was under scrutiny. There are no lights to identify this phone and it is often confused and looking from the other three. The phone, although slightly more complicated to use, worked perfectly fine by sufficiently contacting the DPS officer on duty.

Lash, another officer, was located near the Volleyball Court by Hall 8 and 9. This phone had no working lights which established communication.

Although it did work, the officer said it was difficult to hear and there was an extent amount of static. 10 seconds after the call began talking during a second test, however, there was no static and the officer could hear the caller clearly.

Of course, these findings are brought to the attention of George Coronado in hopes for some comments regarding if DPS knew of these problems and what they were planning to do about them in the future? The first concern was the phone by the football field:

- Apparently, the week of Archway's investigation, DPS conducted their own investigation. This phone was deemed inoperable when checked by Archway, then by DPS.

The vendor of the phones, Shure, was called immediately and planned to remove the phone on Friday for repairs. It will be a week or two before this phone is back and operable because Shure did not have the needed parts in inventory.

- The other concern about no light on the phone in lot C was explained by Mr. Coronado. He comments that “This phone has never been equipped with a light. It is a ‘Rain Tech’ phone and unlike the others, it has consistently worked well.” Since the phone never had a light to begin with, there are obviously no functional problems with the phone.

The final concern was in regards to the lack of lights on the phone by Hall 8 and 7 and the apparent difficulty the person had time the phone was tested was with Mr. Coronado. He wanted to be sure the phone was turned on correctly. As stated earlier, there were no problems during this second test.

Of course, this investigation was proposed to become more familiar with the phones and to better understand how they work and where they are located. DPS intends to be sure to look for problems that might arise with these phones.

DPS checks the phones on a regular basis and when there are apparent problems, DPS refers them to Mr. Coronado. Mr. Coronado does point out that “All equipment eventually breaks down. Equipment exposed constantly to the weather, as these phones are, break down. Of course, some of the problems are simple maintenance and as always, will be an ongoing process to maintain.

Any questions for George Ross?

By Meghan Hanlon

How far would you take a class assignment? For Justin Orkin his answer is all the way to the top. In his Production and TV class, Professor Medcalf asked his students to interview anyone of their choosing. While many students in this class choose locals to help complete their assignment, one student thought bigger.

Orkin wanted to meet the man who made the phrase “You’re Fired!” the next big thing. Orkin chose Trump because he is “a powerful man, who worked hard to get where he is” and also because he thought it would be an unforgettable experience.

Using his own resources, Justin Orkin spoke to the Trump Administration and continued up the ladder. Quickly learning that Trump would be a hard person to get two minutes with, Orkin went for the next best person: George Ross, Trump’s right hand man.

Orkin says his chance to meet George Ross is a chance to show his magic in the boardroom, and I think it would also be a great learning opportunity.”

Orkin had the opportunity to speak with Ross directly on the phone to set up his interview. Orkin was given a 30 minute slot to speak with Ross. It is Orkin’s intent to ask Ross questions for 15 minutes then spend the rest of the time turning parts of the Trump Organization. After speaking with Ross, there is a possibility that Ross will introduce Orkin to Trump.

Orkin is looking for suggestions on questions he can ask Ross. If you have any in mind, please e-mail him at jwv1@bryant.edu. Look for a follow up article with the questions and answers that will be exchanged during this meeting.
Don't ask policy has impact

By Dan Thies

The Seattle Times/Next

As we all know, the winner of this presidential election will face many policy challenges. While judging candidates on foreign policy and Afghanistan with the prospect of possible future threats, the next commander in chief will also be forced to address the tremendous strain currently on U.S. military personnel.

Widely regarded as an imminent and difficult draft have become the subject of intense speculation and debate. This week, The House of Representatives, seeking to quell these concerns, released its required bill calling for its remaining 18.5 million draft. But whether such numbers were truly plausible, or simply a false, one important point seems to have been lost in the discussion. The age of the draft can never be justified with first repeating the "don't ask, don't tell" policy of barring openly gay people from military service.

While both President George W. Bush and Sen. John Kerry have called for a draft, the two veterans say that they would maintain an all-volunteer force. And while President Bush will have to address the issue of scaling numbers in military personnel, the next administration in, considering every alternative, would cut to Congress to repeal the costly and discriminatory "don't ask, don't tell" policy.

In the five years between 1992 and 2002, 6,273 military personnel were expelled under the current policy, according to an analysis by the Center for the Study of Sexual Minorities in the Military.

And from the 1993 enactment of "don't ask" to 2002, the U.S. military spent an estimated $218 million recruiting replacement replacements for discharged gay personnel, according to a Human Rights Watch report.

With the U.S. shoulder- most of the financial and military burden in Iraq, Bush's go-it-alone approach to the war has alienated many traditional allies, and raised legitimate questions over how to maintain sufficient troop levels.

The Bush administration has seen its draft of 5,600 members of the Civilian Reserve (IRR), an action referred to as a "balk door" draft. Many observers are convinced that this president is running out of pre-dead options. Yet, many able service members, whether they need to, could be discharged from the military for their "homosexuality." Most of the 5,600 recalled members of the IRR were needed to man gaps in highly specialized areas of military service, including a radio-speaking linguists, combat engineers, mechanics, paratroopers, truck drivers, and food-service workers, according to a July 7 United Press International report.

The same report notes that over the past five years, roughly 1,000 service members possessing these very skills have been unqualified under "don't ask." Senator Bush's justification for supporting "don't ask," which parallels the Pentagon's position, is that the need for military service, and is a threat to morale that cannot be offset.

However, the Human Rights Watch report goes on to say that a number of our NATO allies, including the United Kingdom, Germany and Israel, began integrating openly gay service members as far back as 20 years ago, with no measurable impact on military effectiveness.

It also noted that the amount of integration took place when military leaders at the highest level supported and strongly enforced nondiscrimination policies.

In reality, the "don't ask" policy has its limitations. "It has potential for growth, in a niche sort of way," said a software company executive. "We have no recruiting skills."

Today, the company, which says it hopes to become profitable by the end of 2005, has 140 employees and is concentrating on upgrades to its technology instead of launching a hardware product.

The company's potential plan for the Sidekick is three-pronged. It gets money from a one-time activation fee of each Sidekick product, recouping licensing fees on its software and a cut of e-commerce transactions such as sales of ringer downloads that are performed through the gadgets.

Currently, it's partnered with T-Mobile and two small regional wireless carriers, as well as four other carriers overseas.

The real growth for Danger, it appears, will be in Europe, where the GSM cell phone technology that Danger operates on is widespread. In the United States, only a few companies are introducing Danger's devices using the GSM standard.

"They're interested in great ideas and the software proves it," said Todd Achilles, director of Handset Product Management for T-Mobile USA, said of Danger.

Danger's technology could set the pace for the future of the mobile Internet, not only through faster downloads but through times for web pages and content on the devices but also by lowering costs for the consumer. For others, the company could create a loyal following among 20-somethings. "Danger could become ripe for acquisition by a deep-pocketed company that wants a piece of youth spending power," said Rob Endriss, principal analyst with the Enderle Group in San Jose.

Or Danger could get trampled by a company with a bigger pocketbook. "It's that's even more tedious, he said.

Danger's next trick is going to be very, very important. "We're going to define the long-term viability of the market," said Mike Wolf, Yankee Group analyst. "The question I have for them is, 'What comes next?'" watch the debates. Debates are here for the election and to affect collective memory,” stated Krause. Even though we are not seeing a “true” debate, according to Krause the debates will still “perpetuate democracy.” The debates are in place so that we, the voters, can visually evaluate the candidates while we hear their stance on issues that will affect us all. Nixon is in no way saying that the debates are not worth watching, quite the contrary. He feels that to be an educated voter, we as a people must understand the debate process prior to evaluation. We need to know the facts behind the debate such as visual impressions, established questioning, rebuttal and press involvement. With this knowledge, we are better equipped to handle the debate itself.

So how after watching all three debates, can we use them to make our final decision on who to vote for? It is really quite simple. Pull all of the modified elements out of the debate such as height adjustments, make-up, what they are wearing. Also, remember the candidates and how they reacted and interacted. Use the televised debate to your advantage. This is one of the few times we will actually see the candidates become vulnerable to one another. Can they stand their grounds, do they keep eye contact, do they stay on topic? Make sure to compare and contrast between all three of the debates. The first and second debates were very different in presentation. Remember there is more to the candidates than their presentation. Sid Krause referred to a study done, which dealt with the 1960 debate. The study called for two groups of randomly selected people who had never seen or heard of the Kennedy vs. Nixon debate. One group heard the debate on the radio and the other watched it on television. According to that study, the group who heard the debate on the radio actually thought Nixon won, while the other group thought Kennedy won. The general historical consensus is that Kennedy won. Whether you are planning on voting for Bush or Kerry as the coming election is, a decision that we all must make as individuals according to personal beliefs and convictions. The Presidential debate, the conventions, and commercials are just campaign tools used to provide voters with the information they need to cast their vote. So who won the debates? If you managed to watch the debates, review them to yourself using some of the tools here and chances are you will come up with a decision all on your own. Do not let the press or campaign managers tell you who won, make that call for yourself. If you are going to be a voter, be an educated one.

The symbol for happy in Chinese.

have been bearing strange little conversations in the halls lately which means you may have experienced some strange words coming from their intro. Chinese. If you know, or may not know, a foreign language campaign has finally been reinstated at Bryant University. Student organizations, mainly the International Student Organization, has been pushing to make more language courses available in the future. Within the last year, both French and Mandarin Chinese classes have been offered in conjunction with Spanish which was already prevalent on campus. Stanley Lamogina, the International Student Organization president commented "considering the fact that Bryant is a business-concentric institution, it is important to have an international business major, it is imperative that not only are students but also the remaining students become more aware and learn a language that may possibly be applied in the corporate world. The fact that ISO initiated the program with the help of Terri Hasler who said "we felt that it was a huge benefit to Bryant University. Students in the ISO organization are continuing the foreign language campaign and are actively trying to get even more languages on campus such as Portuguese and Italian to be offered as strongly as the organization does, sit in on one of their meetings on Tuesday night in the Heritage Room in the Bryant Center."

As for the Chinese class members, students are indigalizing themselves new and great culture. The Chinese class professor, a junior female major, is just one of the many current Chinese class members who are getting a great learning experience because Jon Lu encourages culture in a way that involves himself in the subject and the Chinese culture. The students are challenged to be present each day with new vocabulary where Kim claims that "one of the biggest challenges is learning the Chinese characters. Although students are taught several characters very fluently yet, conversations about wanting coffee, being hungry, and saying thank you are quite frequent."

For many others who are not used to being taught in Chinese. It is not to be considered the study of any means but to get students to actively participate with every day terms that they are using.

Similarly in the new French classes, students are excited in a great manner. Kevin Martin, a major French and Marketing major, thinks "it’s a great class and is very beneficial, I would stress people to take it but it’s more of an advanced class than what people may have learned in high school. Rosa Perez is a real teacher too," in addition, Rosa Perez is initiating a new program called the "French and Spanish Lunch at Bryant." The lunch encourages students and others to speak in either French or Spanish to assist those in a real life situation. She also encourages people with all skills, either fluent speaking or just wanting to participate. It is a great opportunity for those students to gain more knowledge and practice their speaking skills. The "French and Spanish Lunch at Bryant" is held on Tuesday afternoon from 12:30pm to 1:30pm. If interested, one should email Professor Perez at rital@bryant.edu.

The Malcom and Elizabeth Bryant University. You may have heard of them as the rearll,altion that was presented to the Tupper Family during a rededication of the campus. For those who need to brush up on their Latin, the inscription reads, "From this land, blossoms knowledge and opportunity." Bryant University welcomes all parents and family to the campus.

New Crew: Bryant may soon be up the creek with a paddle

By Kristina De Angelis
Staff Writer

Together freshmen 11. Alan Diaz, Krista Berardi, Aaron Koegel, and Anthony Melillo have started the long process of bringing a new activity to campus. A team comprised of a minor comments about the subject. After some time, the minor comments decided to start the group and have been working hard every since. The new Crew consists of teams of nine people to a boat. There are eight rowers and one coxswain, a type of leader who directs the rowing team. The team has rowers from only six classes and is not solely consist of nine people. To become a club sport, Bryant must have at least twenty-five people. The rowing team needs to be in some sort of flat water. The team is still working on getting permits from the state of Rhode Island, but they have found a place to practice only about a mile from campus on Rough Road Off Site 104. It is about 1.75 miles long, which would be an appropriate practice space for a lake, as appropriate length for the lake is crucial. During the boats do not turn well.

Most of the races that the team has participated in will be head races. According to Diaz, Koegel, and Melillo, there has been expressed interest from both male and female students. This year, the team is looking to practice two days in the water and then additional conditioning. The sport was described by the three founders as a cardiovascular sport that uses the entire body. They plan on holding try-outs for the team due to the intensity of the sport, the dangerous qualities, and the limited space; the try-outs will include, but will not be limited to, a swim test. Despite the try-outs, there will be no experience necessary.

The team, at this moment, is still in the preliminary stage. They are waiting for their constitution to be passed. They are hoping to start their first season in the spring semester, however, when the team is established they will be a year-round sport. Starting the team has been according to three of the founders, "an all day job; always trying to get the word out and working on the constitution." Added to the stress of creating a new sport, the team has had to worry about costs of the team, which are fairly high. Boats themselves are $800 per semester per boat and the team has three boats in order to have at least twenty-five participants on the team. Coaches, which they have not yet obtained, cost usually between $1500-2000 per season. Altogether, that is at least $4500 per semester, and that isn't even factoring in uniforms, permits for the lake, travel, and other necessities. Koegel, the team's treasurer, definitely seems to have her hands full. The team is looking into potential fund raising, Student Senate approved funding, hosting tournaments, and a lot of fundraising activities.

The New England area seems to be the perfect place to start a crew team, according to the three founders. There are many rowing clubs, such as US Rowing, in the area and Brown University has a very well established team. Also, many of the well-established teams in the area are varsity sports at a diverse amount of schools. Diaz, Koegel, and Melillo hope to have Crew become a varsity sport as soon as possible.

Diaz states the famous cliché of, "If you can put your mind to it, you can do it." He says this as advice to anyone who wants to try out for their own club and wants to be a part of the crew team. Koegel adds: "Wherever you can try out, it is a great sport to get into and a great sport to build relationships in." Koegel is the only member of the team who currently has previous experience and he stresses the fact that the people on a crew team are very close due to the circumstances of the sport-nine people in a small boat. Melillo added with both of his future teammates and added in that team is definitely a "passionate sport".

Bulldog Bites: Weekly Athletic Scoreboard

CROSS COUNTRY

Paula Klepado placed 10th overall at the New England Cross Country Championships held Friday at Franklin Park. Klepado finished in a time of 18:13.7, leading the Bulldogs. Harvard’s Lindsey Scherf was the overall winner in 17:22. Holly Resende (was the next Bulldog to cross the line in 18:16.0, finishing 30th overall in the team standings. On the men’s side, Caleb Chang placed 106th.

FIELD HOCKEY

Laynie Sadler scored the game’s first two goals, 1:43 apart early in the first period. After her second, the Bulldogs went on to win 5-2 over Saint Anselm Monday. The Bulldogs had taken the nets for five first half goals on a series of crisp passes. The visitors scored three times off penalty corners and Sadler finished the game with three goals for the Bulldogs. Sadler was named the first of the first half of the season. Michelle O'Dwyer and Lisa Kennen also logged goals for Bryant while Maureen Burns dished out a pair of assists to complete the offense. The Bulldogs will travel to Stonehill on Thursday before returning home to host Franklin this Sunday at the Bryant Field Hockey Complex.

FOOTBALL

Hosts Saint Anselm/Charles Granatell completed 11 of 22 passes in the first half for 131 yards to help lead Bryant to a 31-6 win at Stonehill College last Saturday. The team’s 31 points scored are the most this season for the Bulldogs as Bryant rushed for 276 yards and generated a season-high of 301 yards of total offense. Bryant led 10-0 after one quarter thanks to Pete DiMarco’s career-best 26-yard field goal from history over Cheltenham 13-yard touchdown pass from Granatell early in the second quarter. The Bulldogs then had the first of two touchdown receptions on the day from David Van in the receiving end of a 10-yard pass later in the fourth. David Van had five tackles and a sack to lead the way for the Bryant defense. The Bulldogs will host Franklin this Saturday at 1 p.m. at Bulldog Stadium.

MEN’S GOLF

The Bryant men’s golf team placed 10th at the Powerade Fall College Championships held in Conshohocken, Ohio. Dave Falconi shot an opening round 71 and closed the weekend with a 74 to finish in a tie for 5th with 76. The Bulldogs will next compete in the National Championships October 18-19 at The Captain’s Course on Cape Cod.

Soccer season outlook 2004
By Sam Tahatataba

Key to the Litter

Kelly Whalen is new to Bryant University and to Cross Country however, she's been running much of her life. Having hired in her father's footsteps, Whalen's interest in track commenced around age 13.

For the past three seasons The Bulldogs finished fifth in the Northeast - 10 Conference last year with a record of 9 wins and 6 career losses, 2 ties. The team was the first to finish regular season and traveled to Bentley, after 90 minutes it ended in a 2-2 draw. Bentley prevailed in the penalty shootout knocking Bryant University from the playoffs.

Joe Vouris will contribute another productive season after scoring eleven goals and two assists in his junior season.

In the midfield, senior forward Clint Donec has returned after sitting out all of the 2003 season due to a broken foot. He was all-conference and all-regional in 2002. Senior

JAY's Predictions

American League Championship Series: Red Sox over Yankees

National League Championship Series: Cardinals over Astros in 6

World Series: (do I dare say) Red Sox

Pizza, porkgrinds & MLB predictions
By Jason Gilbert
The number of teams in Major League Baseball has been cut down from 30 to only 8. as well, the American League West champion. The New York Yankees, the Athletics, and the Los Angeles Dodgers were the only teams that clinched a playoff spot. The Boston Red Sox were the last team to clinch a playoff spot, securing the final wildcard spot on September 20, the earliest possible anniversary.

The Boston Red Sox won the American League East with a record of 96-66, securing their 19th consecutive season in the American League East. The Los Angeles Dodgers finished second in the NL West with a record of 95-67, while the St. Louis Cardinals finished second in the NL Central with a record of 93-70.

The match-ups for the playoffs were as follows:

American League Championship Series:
- Red Sox vs. Yankees (best of 7)
- Cardinals vs. Astros (best of 7)

National League Championship Series:
- Cardinals vs. Astros (best of 7)
- Dodgers vs. Cubs (best of 7)

The Red Sox were the favorites to win the American League East, finishing 10 games ahead of the second-place Yankees. The Cardinals were the favorites to win the National League Central, finishing 10 games ahead of the second-place Dodgers.

The Red Sox were led by starting pitcher Roger Clemens, who had a record of 17-8 with 209 strikeouts and a 3.00 ERA. The Cardinals were led by starting pitcher Adam Wainwright, who had a record of 15-3 with 107 strikeouts and a 2.31 ERA.

The Red Sox were not without their fair share of drama. Starting pitcher Clay Buchholz was limited to just 14 starts due to injury, but he was still able to compile a record of 6-1 with 34 strikeouts in 65 innings pitched.

The Cardinals were not without their fair share of drama as well. Starting pitcher Lance Lynn was limited to just 14 starts due to injury, but he was still able to compile a record of 3-4 with 40 strikeouts in 69 innings pitched.

The World Series: (do I dare say) Red Sox
The Red Sox were the favorites to win the World Series. They faced the Astros in the World Series, and they failed to win the World Series, losing the series in six games.

The Red Sox were led by starting pitcher David Price, who had a record of 9-3 with 139 strikeouts and a 2.56 ERA. The Astros were led by starting pitcher Lance McCullers Jr., who had a record of 11-10 with 140 strikeouts and a 4.34 ERA.

The Red Sox were not without their fair share of drama. Starting pitcher Chris Sale was limited to just 21 starts due to injury, but he was still able to compile a record of 17-8 with 176 strikeouts and a 3.44 ERA.

The Astros were not without their fair share of drama as well. Starting pitcher Justin Verlander was limited to just 21 starts due to injury, but he was still able to compile a record of 12-7 with 130 strikeouts and a 3.13 ERA.

The World Series was a heavily competitive series, with both teams putting up a strong fight. In the end, the Red Sox were able to secure their second World Series title in the past two years, winning in six games over the Astros. The World Series was a hard-fought battle, and it was a great series to watch.
The Hanover: The reason why Bryant policy is wack #562

I first decided I was going to write a column in The Archway when I suddenly got more involved with things that got me writing, more experience, and more confidence. I mean, who doesn't want to be a editor of the paper. I figured I would spend some time writing about things that relate to our activities and then I'd probably get some more. It was my way of going somewhere and talking to some great people. And here I am today, sharing my thoughts about the Hanover.

I want to talk about a recent article that was written about Hanover by a student. I found it interesting that they mentioned that Hanover is interested in making students feel welcome. I know they have a new program called "Hanover Early Days," which is designed to help incoming students feel more comfortable. I think that's a great idea because it's important for students to feel supported and welcomed.

However, I also want to mention that the Hanover has been criticized in the past for its policies and practices. Some students have felt that the Hanover is not being responsive to their needs or concerns. I think it's important for the Hanover to continue to listen to their students and work towards finding solutions that are inclusive and respectful of everyone.

Regarding the Hanover's early days program, I think it's a positive step. It's important for students to feel supported and welcomed as they begin their college journey. However, it's also important for the Hanover to listen to their students and work towards finding solutions that are inclusive and respectful of everyone.

I believe that Hanover has the potential to be a great community, but it needs to continue to work towards making it a place where everyone feels welcome and supported. I think it's important for students to be involved in the decision-making process and to have a say in the direction that Hanover takes.

In conclusion, I think that Hanover has the potential to be a great community, but it needs to continue to work towards making it a place where everyone feels welcome and supported. I think it's important for students to be involved in the decision-making process and to have a say in the direction that Hanover takes.

The Archway: Diagnosing the relationship

By Tara Whaley

Staff Columnist

Do you have a room mate? Do you live in the dorms? Have you lived with a roommate before? If so, you might have experienced some of the challenges that come with sharing a living space.

For example, you might have had to deal with a roommate who was always late for meals or who didn't clean up after themselves. You might have had to deal with a roommate who was noisy or who didn't respect your personal space.

There are certain things that people do when they are living in a dorm or a dorm-like environment that can cause issues. Some of these things include:
- Not doing your fair share of the cleaning
- Not being respectful of each other's personal space
- Not being considerate of each other's needs
- Not being open to compromise and working towards a solution
- Not being willing to listen to each other's concerns
- Not being willing to put in the effort to make things work
- Not being willing to make sacrifices for the sake of the relationship

When these things happen, it can be difficult to work through the issues and find a resolution. It's important to communicate openly and honestly with your roommate and to be willing to work towards a solution.

In conclusion, living with a roommate can be challenging, but it can also be rewarding. It's important to be open to compromise and to be willing to work towards a solution in order to make the relationship work.

Caminiti: Not your typical role model

Ken Caminiti was a very talented baseball player. He won the National League MVP in 1996, and helped lead the San Diego Padres into the World Series. He passed away of an apparent heart attack on Sunday October 11. Unfortunately, he will not be remembered for what he did on the field. He will forever be seen as the player who first pointed out that he, and other players, have been using performance enhancing steroids.

Caminiti may be looked at as a cheater for his use of steroids during his career. His MVP season may be washed off the record books, but even if that is the case, at least in this writer’s eyes, Ken Caminiti is a role model. A role model not for his baseball exploits, but for facing what he did wrong like a man.

What if your greatest achievement was tainted and no one but you knew it? What if you became the valedictorian of your school because you cheated on your final exams? How many people can say that they, after getting away with it, would turn around and let everyone know they were a fraud? Sadly, not many.

What made this even more amazing is that he had absolutely nothing to gain from it. No book deals, no endorsement deals, nothing so ever! He came out with this information because deep down he knew he needed to. It was the right thing to do. This isn’t Pete Rose going decades denying betting on baseball then changing his story in his newest book (which became a New York Times Best Seller) to make a great profit. This is the average Joe baseball player who says that his one great achievement is about as real as Michael Jackson’s nose.

Other baseball players came out with information about steroid use after Caminiti. One of the biggest names is Jose Canseco. He came forward and told the world that he was ready to tell the truth about his use of steroids, and the use of many other players. He knew who used, how they used, and everything else, but this information would only be disclosed in his newest book. “I want to be like Barry Bonds.” Good idea kid! Let’s try and be the single meanest, classless, dishonest guy in the league. Or maybe we should dream of being Jason Giambi. Yeah, go from puny run to an enormous beast...and back again! A parasitic infection and a tumor later he has probably realized that his shortcut to greatness was a very bad idea. Maybe we should all leave our team and responsibilities right before the football season opens like Reifer Williams, oops, I mean Ricky. My bad.

Caminiti’s use of steroids was unarguable. My respect for his athletic achievements is lost. Athletic achievements are not the only element to judge a man by though. Most of us play sports in some way, and we all do things in games that, in retrospect, are stupid, idiotic, and wrong. It is what you do after you make your big mistake that matters. Anyone can get away with a lie. Anyone can disguise a mistake or blame someone else. It takes something special to stand up and say you were wrong, no matter what the consequences may be.

So when you are looking for a figure in sports to idolize, do not just look at the skill of the player. Very few of us will ever be able to do what athletes do on the field. You should look at the character of that man or woman. Ken Caminiti, despite his drug issues and legal troubles, had the character that many of us lack.

Robert Frost wrote in his poem Road Less Traveled, "Two roads diverged in a wood, And I took the one less traveled by, And that has made all the difference." Ken Caminiti took the least traveled road of honesty, and when deciding what kind of a man he was, that has made all the difference.

STUDENTS SPEAK OUT

Question of the Week: Who do you think is going to win the American League Championships?

Sarah Campbell ’08
"The Red Sox have the greatest potential they’ve had in years."

Matt Alarie ’05
"The Red Sox. Why not? I am from Massachusetts."

Davin Morris ’07
"The Yankees because my roommate will kill me."

Angela L’Heureux ’07
"The Red Sox because this is the year baby!"

Josh Hetcher ’07
"The Red Sox because we have pitching, defense and offense."

Craig Buckhout ’08
"The Yankees because they always win and their better!"

Dining out with Joe and Rohan: Curry

Welcome to the newest feature of The Archway, bi-weekly restaurant reviews from you guessed it... Joe Hansen and Rohan Shah. We will be offering a unique perspective on restaurants all over the Rhode Island and Southeastern Massachusetts area. In all of our reviews we will be offering both Vegetarian and Non-Vegetarian options, because Rohan is a vegetarian and Joe, well Joe just isn't. All restaurants will be rated in four categories: Quality, Service, Price, and Location.

For our first column we will be reviewing Kabob and Curry, located at 261 Thayer Street in Providence. From the moment you walk into the door you are welcomed by all of the finest Indian spices from some of the best chefs in Providence. This restaurant is popular among college students (Brown and RISD), as well as families. We enjoy going here on a fairly consistent basis followed by a walk along Thayer Street for some ice cream and shopping.

Our favorite appetizer is the Samosa, either vegetarian or with lamb, both are sure to fill your mouth with a sudden burst of spice. For the main course there is the vibrant and full bodied Chicken Tikka Masala, cubed white meat chicken in a specially blended spiced yogurt, tomato sauce. It is absolutely delicious, trust us. The dish mentioned above can be spicy for some, so for the milder taste buds we would recommend the Tandoori Chicken, cooked in the Tandoor (a clay pot) this seasoned chicken is full of flavor, and just melts in your mouth. As for a vegetarian entree we would recommend the Paneer Makhani, cubed cottage cheese in a specially blended spiced, yogurt, tomato gravy. To top it all off, you need to have some Naan, leavened bread, which goes along exceptional with the entrees mentioned above. We would strongly recommend the Garlic Naan!!

We've decided that we need to start getting a head start for Senior Week. After thinking about how important and busy senior year is going to be, I decided that we need a place where we can all turn to for new ideas and updates about our class. Sure we all have a place we turn to for news whether it is email, gossip around campus or hanging out at Kente's with your buddies. But this year we're starting this section to help make our class more aware of the different projects, opportunities and events that will be occurring during this year. It's time for us to start taking some pride in our class and involvement in the great successes of the Class of 2005.

Each year there are two main senior related projects that represent the individual and personality of a senior class. These projects are Senior Week and the Senior Class Gift. Senior Week is a series of week long events through which the senior class gives one last week of celebration, memories and each other. The Student Senate appoints a chair to this committee each year, or in this class case two co-chairs, Kara Pagani and Froso Tsambazis. The dynamic duo of Kara and Froso ensures our class of having one of the best Senior Weeks in Bryant University history. Kara has shown extreme pride and dedication to senior week through her involvements in the Student Senate and Peer Ed. We will be able to count on her to use her skills, personality and that big beautiful head of hair to carry our class into an amazing last hurrah. Through Froso's involvement in SPP, and Froso's involvement in 2003, she will use her leadership skills and experience to organize fundraising events that will help cut down on the extra cost of each individual's senior week expense. The events during the week sometimes vary from class to class, but popular past events have included the Senior Ball, a night at Dave and Busters, a clam bake and a cruise on the Spirit of Boston. Assisting Kara and Froso in the planning and organizing will be their committee of equally motivated and dedicated seniors. The Senior Class Committee is composed of the following.

| Stanley Lomazano | John Cullen |
| Alicia Robbins | Jamie Zoli |

Week or the committee is encouraged to contact either Kara (KJP) or Froso (FRG).

The second major project that takes place this week is the Senior Class Gift. Each senior is responsible for organizing, planning and donating a memorable and beneficial gift to the University. This gift should be something that is need or assistance in an area of the institution. Past gifts have included scholarships, classroom renovations and assorted pieces of architecture around campus (i.e. that weird rock with hieroglyphics on it near the Archway). The Student Senate is also responsible for allocating a chair to this committee as well. This year this task has been assigned to John Johnson. Yes, the same guy who's writing this very article. I've been working closely with Laurie Mansgrove who is the Vice President of Business Development and Marketing. We've decided to completely revamp the way Senior Class funds have been done in the past. The same method used to raise money for Bryant's campaigns is going to be applied to the Senior Class. Shaun Frost, and ate with zombies. "Scary Movie" came out this past February. It was during his freshman year at UMass Dartmouth that things started to fall in place. He made a demo tape of solo songs for friends in 1995 and was soon joining other acts at local clubs. Shaun's best friend Ed (Frost) is an drummer and style took root. His musical career started in high school, and he formed the band "Bulletproof Heart". They released their first album "Scream" in 1996. Shaun's music has a unique sound, combining rock with soul, but not always successfully. The band's sound was described as "raw and unpolished". Shaun's music has a unique sound, combining rock with soul, but not always successfully. The band's sound was described as "raw and unpolished".

On October 21, Shaun Kellogg and the Sixers will be playing as part of the Acoustic Showcase at 8 P.M. on the stage at South Café. Dylan Conner will get the night started.

Shaun fights off zombies with a cricket bat. For him, Shaun's girlfriend Liz (Ashfield) can't stand his idle ways and his sloth of a best friend. However, Liz is just like Shaun, never apart from her friends, a couple she compares their relationship to. She desires changes in their relationship because his idea of going out is relaxing in the local pub, every night. Once Shaun realizes flesh eating creatures that have returned from the dead are infecting those through biting, he begins his quest for change assuming a leadership role and protecting everyone in his company. Shaun's whity weapons of choice range from a cricket bat to vinyl records. The audience will embarrass Shaun's immaturity and route for him as he emerges a hero and becomes an adult.
